TOPOGRAPHY AND ANTIQUITIES

Excerpt from the Report by the Council of the Spalding Club, to the eighth annual general meeting of the members, held at Aberdeen, on Tuesday the twenty-second day of December, 1846.

A volume of ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE TOPOGRAPHY AND ANTIQUITIES OF THE SHIRES OF ABERDEEN AND BANFF, edited by JOSEPH ROBERTSON, esquire, has been for some time at press, and but for accidental circumstances which hindered the printer from fulfilling his engagement, would have been finished before this period. It will be issued early in the year 1847.

The materials placed at the Editor's disposal, chiefly from the charter-rooms of ancient families within the two counties, have so far exceeded expectation, that it has been found necessary to divide the work into Three Volumes. The Second of these, containing the beginning of the Text, will appear first; the Third, giving the conclusion of the Text, the Appendix, and a copious Index (as well to this work as to the COLLECTIONS FOR A HISTORY OF THE SHIRES OF ABERDEEN AND BANFF), will appear next; and the First volume, occupied with a lengthened Preface, and its documentary illustrations, will be delivered last of all.

datas, dumetis et virgultis circumseptas. In has, quoties angustiis vrgentur, armenta detrudunt; vt melius a grassatorum incursionibus et a tagacium furtis, obvallata inclusione, vindicentur." (Richardi Stanibursti Dubliniensis de Rebvs in Hibernia Geſtis, lib. i. p. 33. Antverpiæ 1584.)

The importance of fortified places of refuge in the middle ages was such, that we find Roger of Scalebroc, a great lord in Carrick, towards the end of the twelfth century, granting to the monks of Melros, a toft under his castle of Grenan, where they might place their goods and chattels: "et toftum subtus castellum meum de Grenan ubi possint res suas et catala reponere." (Liber S. Marie de Melros, tom. i. p. 27.)

* By an oversight of the transcriber, the following passage has been omitted from the text, in the Lessons for S. Ternan's day. It follows the word "Albaniam" p. 54. line 8.: "Coniecturius autem qui terre illius principatum tenuit Beatum Ternanum cum multitudine qui secum venerant aspiciens sic alloquitur: Hypocrite · quid in terra mea queritis · Sanctus respondit: Salutem tuam querimus ut Deum cognoscas et illi soli seruias · Dicit autem Coniecturius: Hec subdola desine verba dicere · sique repulsam passus Sanctus recessit et eo recedente pes ipsius Coniecturii lapidi in quo stetit ita adheserat ut aucti non poterit · cumque pro eo Sanctus orasset liberatus et baptizatus est."

In the middle of the sixteenth century, a copy of the Gospel of S. Mathew, believed to have been given to S. Ternan by Pope S. Gregory the Great, was preserved at Banchory S. Ternan, with other relics of the Apostle of the Picts (Registrum Episcopatus Aberdonensis, vol. i. p. lxxxvi.) The same work preserves another deed regarding "the bell of Sanct Ternen callit the Ronecht" (vol. i. pp. 327, 328.) Several instances of the devotion in which consecrated bells were held in Scotland, have been collected in the Liber Collegii Nostræ Domine Glasguensis, pp. xxiv—xxvi. To these may be added the following note (for which I am indebted to the learned Professor of History in the University of Edinburgh) of a charter by King James VI., in the Register of the Great Seal, of the fifteenth of September 1572, setting in feu to Donald Dewar the forty penny lands of Garrindevair in Strogartney of Mensteth: "que olim pro pulsatione unius campane coram mortuis personis infra parochiam de Kilmahug tempore papismatis fundate et dedicate erant · nunc in manibus nostris devenerunt ratione alteracionis status religionis et abolitionis servicii predicti."

* S. Finian, probably the founder of Innisfallen. The feast of S. Finian, confessor, surnamed the Leper, was celebrated in Ireland on the sixteenth of March. The feast of S. Finian, bishop and confessor, was observed by the Scottish church on the eighteenth day of the same month. (Breviar. Aberd.; et Kalend. et Martyr. Aberd.) In the beginning of the last century 'Finzean fair at the kirk of Migvie,' was kept 'whiles in March and whiles in April, on the Tuesday before Midlentron fair at Banchrie.' (Aberdeen's New Prognostication for the year 1708.)

† The festival of S. Mochteus, surnamed Mochta Lugh, first bishop of Louth, was held on the nineteenth of August. 'Luoch fair' at the kirk of Tarland is still kept about the same season. S. Mochteus is supposed to be the 'quidam proselytus Brito, homo sanctus, Sancti Patricii episcopi discipulus,' whose prophecy of the future renown of S. Columba, is recorded by Adomnan in the second preface to his Life of the venerable Abbot of Iona. (Pinkert. Vitae Antiq. SS. Scot. p. 55.)

THE PARISH OF KINCARDINE O'NEIL.<sup>1</sup>

DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF KINCARDIN ONEIL. BY MR. WILLIAM ROBERTSON. A.D. M.DCC.XXV.<sup>2</sup>

HE parish of Kincardin Oneil, in the sheriffdom of Aberdeen, is bounded, on the south-east, with the parish of Banchory Ternan; and, on the east, divided from Midmar by The Hill of Fair; on the north and north-west, by the parishes of Tough and Lumphanan; on the west, by the parish of Aboyn; and on the south, by the parish of Birss.

The church of Kincardin is situate within a mile of the west end of the parish, very near the river of Dee, which runs on the south side of the same, and is passed by a ferry boat opposite to the village call'd Kincardin Oneil, in which the church stands. The said church is distant from Aberdeen eighteen miles westward up the said river; from Banchory, six miles; from Midmar, six miles; from Lumphanan church, two miles; from Aboyn church, two long miles; from Aboyn castle, three short miles; and from Birss church, two miles. The said church is a goodly edifice, higher and wider than any other upon Dee, thatch'd at present with heather. Tho' the building be pretty large, yett it's shorter by a half, as appears by the remaining walls, than it has been within these hundred years. It stands in the east end of the town, in a large churchyard, with a pretty good bell on the west end of it. The kirkton is a burgh of barony, containing about thirty families, and is pretty well accommodated for passengers, with which it is frequented, in their way south and north by The Cairn of Mount. There is a tollbooth in the said town, and several other good houses, but none slated. The heritor of the town, and lands belonging thereto, is John Forbes, youngest son to the late Sir John Forbes of Craigivar, who purchas'd it from the Strachans, who had long possessed it. The minister's house is separated from the town, on the east side, by a little burn, over which is an arch. The minister under Episcopacy, it being a personage, was accounted a baron, and held court within the kirk lands, which are very considerable, which still continue to pay customs, videlicet: geese, waddars, etc. to the minister. There are three yearly fairs in the said town: the first, on the second Tuesday of May, called May Fair; the second, on the first or second Saturday of July, called Play Saturday; and the third, on the last Tuesday of August, called Barthol Fair, which stands three days; the other two, but a day each. Near to the town, on the north side, is an excellent spring well, called Saint Erchan's Well.

There is scarce any gentleman's seat worth naming in all the parish. The nearest heritor's residence is Milne of Kincardine, a mile westwards up the river from the church, and upon the direct road from Aberdeen to Bremar. The milne goes upon the burn of Desk, which flows from the Lough of Auchlossen, in the parish of Lumphanan, about a mile and an half north-west from the said milne. There is upon this burn, a quarter of a mile above the milne, a very large high waterfall, called The Slogg of Desk, which falls into a very deep pot of water, that has not been known to be anything like fathomable, even in the droughtiest seasons. This burn, which, in a stonecast after it passes the said milne, emptieth itself into Dee, divides Kincardin from Aboyn parish, and is rendered very passable by a strong timber bridge, with stone landsteals, a little above the said milne.

To the northward of Kincardine, about a mile, upon the highway, is a village called Hillhead: midway 'twixt, and Burnside of Lumphanan, (a publick inn,) hard by the toun, on the north side, is an inclosure belonging to Sir Patrick Fraser of Dores; the said Sir Patrick being a considerable heritor in this parish, but has no dwelling-house in it: his interest begins hard by the toun, and goes along with the road on each side north-eastward, untill it comes to The Burn of Canny, which will be two long miles. The said burn, which is pretty impetuous upon occasions, is passed at Walk-milne by a timber bridge, where is a walk-milne, and very good service at it: there having been a race of people by name Walkers, which have lived there past memory of man. A little below, upon the same burn, is a meal-milne, called The Milne of Mid Bealty. This burn runs from north-west to south-east. From that bridge eastward a short quarter of a mile, is an other burn running southward from The Hill of Lairnie, on which are two milnes : the first, The Milne of Lairney, near the hill ; the next, The Milne of Craigmyle, about half a mile southward from that, or less.

North-eastward from that, towards The Hill of Fair, a quarter of a mile, is the manour place of Craigmyle, upon a rising ground. The heritor is Alexander Farquharson of Monaltry, brother to the laird of Invercald. He has a pretty good house, new built, having but lately purchased these lands from the heirs of Sir Alexander Burnet of Craigmyle, who, during his having these lands, built a very fine loaf in the church of Kincardine, finely coloured, to be seen intire. East from Craigmyle, about half a myle, lyes The Hill of Fair, a very beautifull hill, and commodious for the country, having a fine soil for fewel, and stored with a great many fine weathers, that stay in it in summer and winter. There is a road breaks off from the former, which was said to go north-eastward, within a short mile of the church, which leads northwards to the said Burn of Canny, passed there only by steps, on the other side of which are the lands of Wester Beltie.

Northwards, a quarter of a mile, are the lands of Lairney, the hill of which is famous for the good kind of stone in it for grave-stones, miln-stones, and hewn stone for building, very much frequented to for that end. On the north side of the hill, towards the east end, is a famous well, near a village called Drumlassie, resorted to the first Sunday morning of May by crouds of people, readily sitting by it all the Saturday night before.

North-west from that well lyes a pleasant litle corner of the parish, called The Breas of Tomads, enclosed with hills on all sides, except a litle open towards the south, thro' which the forsaid burn Canny runs. There is in the midst of that country a miln upon the said burn, called The Milne of Tomads, and another below that, towards the open of the country, called The Miln of Ennek, upon the same burn. The heretour of that corner is Francis Fraser of Findrock, who lately purchased them from the Lord Forbes. His residence is in the mouth of that little country, only distinguishable by a few trees, but belongs to Lumphanan parish.

There is a rode northward through that country, by the church of Tough, and another thro' it, thro' Kinnairny parish, Aberdeenward, from the Highlands. The distance betwixt Tomads and the church, keeping by the church rode, (which passes from the toun up the burn of Kincardine, thro' the hill of Kincardine, and so in over another little hill eastward, thence northward to The Milne of Balnacraig, near which they enter the country,) will be three miles, and four in the remoter places.

From Kincardine, eastward, a quarter of a mile, to a village called Borrows-toune, the highway goes on ; thence turns with the river till it comes to Inchbair, where the highway passes the river by very good ferry boats. There is on the left side of the rode a litle birch wood inclosed, called The Wood of Cordach, belonging to Strachan of Dalhaikie, who has an estate in the parish, containing the lands of Slowie and Dalhaikie, which lye betwixt Mossmad on the north and Dee on the south, but no place of residence for the heretour. This Mossmad, which will be two short miles from Kincardin, is very large, and serves a good part of the country thereabout. It's of a foggy nature, and very deep, but appears to stand on water; as appears by an instance of a poor man, a few years ago, who digging a little too deep for the best fewall, which are the better the deeper, was, by the opening of one peat, so suddenly overflowen, that no reliefs could be made, notwithstanding severall by-standers. There is, at the west end of this moss, the walls of an old castle, of a vast thickness in the walls, but will not exceed twenty foot square. It's thought to have been under roof in Wallace days, by his book. The rode from Breamar to Aberdeen passes by on the south side of the moss, in dry weather, otherways through the hill of Slowie, which, beginning at Borrowstoun, goes eastward till it comes to Walkmiln of Invercanny, which will be about two and a half miles, and so into the parish of Banchory. On the north side of the said moss is The Hill of Beltie, by the north side of which the rode from Kincardine is continued, and in half a mile reaches another bridge upon the burn of Canny, called The Bridge of Craigour, of timber also.

Eastward from that, a long half mile, is the residence of William Burnet of Camphield, at the foot of The Hill of Fair, known by a little planting about it. Camphield is three miles from Kincardine. Midway betwixt bridge of Craigour and Camphield, is Milne of Camphield, which is serv'd with a small burn coming from The Hill of Fair. Camphield is about a mile south-east of Craigmyle: the said Camphield's land, adjoining to the parish of Banchory, divided only by a small burn called The Pooly Burn. From the foresaid bridge of Craigour, south-east, about half a mile, is another miln upon Canny, called The Miln of Bealty, which serves the lands of Easter Bealty, lying betwixt the upper end of the hill of Bealty, and a little below the milne.

OLDSTANE and Logie, formerly two parishes, but now united,<sup>3</sup> are bounded, on the north, by Migvie and Tarland; on the south, by Tullich; on the west and north-west, by Glengardin and Strathdone; and, on the east, by Tarland and Coul.

The church,<sup>4</sup> which hath but lately been built, for the service of both parishes, lyes four miles north from Dee, and as many south from Don; twenty-five miles west-north-west from Aberdeen; four, from Aboyn; and eight, from the presbytery seat, at Kin-carden Oneil, to the same point; and two miles, west from Tarland.

Seats. The gentlemen's seats here are as followes: Whitehouse, one mile south-west from the church, at the foot of the Hill of Rore; Logie, half a mile west from it, at the foot of Culblain; Pittelachie, half a mile, and Blelack, a quarter of a mile, west from the church.

Rivers. There are no rivers of note. A brook, called The Burn of Logie, springs from the hill of The Rore, two miles west from the church; and, passing by Logie and Blelack, enters Dee at Miln of Dinnat, in Aboyn paroch, after a course of five miles east.

Lochs. In the south parts of the paroch, about one mile from the church, are two lochs, adjacent to one another, named Loch Kaunder and Loch D'awin, at the foot of a steep hill, called Baad Chraskie, through which is a highway betwixt Aberdeen and the heights of Strathdone, etc.

Hills. Murvin, or The Bunnyach, is a very big hill, in the middle of the paroch; Baad Chraskie, on the south; Knock soul, on the west; and Culblain, on the south-west. The Forrest of Culblain is remarkable for being the field of several battels, particularly in The Bruce's wars, betwixt the regents Murray and Stewart, and The Cummin, where the latter was utterly defeat; and, since, betwixt The Master of Forbes and the Highlanders, where the former was put to flight.

PRESBYTERY OF KINCARDINE—LOGY AND COLDSTONE. 9

The length of the parioch, from Riven, west, to Logie, east, is one and a half miles ; and its breadth, from Smidihill, north, to Monin D'awn, south, two miles.

This is a good countrey, both for corns and pasture, and also well provided in mosses.<sup>1</sup>

MIGVIE parioch is bounded upon the north by Strathdone and Towie; upon the south, by Coldstane; upon the west, by Strathdone; and upon the east, by Tarland.

The church<sup>3</sup> lyes three miles south of the river Don; twenty-five miles west-north-west from Aberdeen; a mile and a half west from Tarland; and seven miles and a half, the same way, from the presbytery seat at Kincarden O'Neil.

Gentlemen's seats are as follows: Pronie, half a mile south from the church, at Seats. the foot of a hill called Maliewat, in the midst of an allar wood: Ardgeith, in the middle of the parioch, a mile west from the church, upon the water of Deskrie: and Blackmiln, one mile east from the church.

Hard by Ardgeith is a chappel, with a well called Buyanswell.

The water of Deskrie takes its rise in The Bunniach, or Morven, four miles Rivers. south from the church of Migvie, and, after a course of three miles south-east through that parioch, by the north side of Ardgeith, enters Don at a house of its name.

The water of Earnen takes its origin at a hill called The Leight, about seven miles north from Corgarf Castle, and runs south-east through Glen Earnen about five miles, till it is swallowed up of Don, at Inverearnen.

Rippachie is a brook springing out of Maliewat, and, after about a mile's course north-west, running into Deskrie.

Hills of note are Murvin, on the west; Culblain, on the south; and Malie- Hills. wat, on the east.

The Don bounds it upon the north. Its length, from the head of Earnenside, on the west, to Blackmiln, east, is six miles; and its breadth, where greatest, only one.

<sup>3</sup> [“About three hundred or four hundred yards south from the church of Migvie may be seen, on a small eminence, the ruins of a castle of the Earl of Mar, where the feu duties of the proprietor of Blelach, in the parish of Logie Coldstone, were appointed by his charters to be paid annually to the superior. At what period the castle was reduced to ruins cannot be ascertained. Its site is now all under green turf.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xlii., p. 843. Edinb. 1843. 8vo.)]

This parioch is cheifly fit for pasture, tho' in several places there are good corns. It is now united with the parioch of Tarland.

TARLAND parioch has on the north the parioches of Towy and Cushny; on the south, Glentanar; on the east, Coul; and on the west, Coldstane and Migwie. The church lyes in the midle of the town of Tarland, three miles south from Don, and as many north from Dee; twenty-four miles west-north-west from Aberdeen; three, north-west from Aboyn; four, south-west from Kildrummy; and six, west from the presbytery seat at Kincarden O'Neil.

- Seats. Corrachrie is a gentleman's seat, two miles west from the church.
- Rivers. The village [of Tarland], which is large and commodiously situated for the hills, is a burrough of regality, with a tolbooth, and virtuall house for the sale of meal and grain, etc., and a good weekly mercat every Wednesday, with convenient inns.
- Hills. It is watered by a brook of the same name, which arises from Maliewat, two miles west, and runs five miles south-east, through Coul, till it enter Dee at Aboyn.
- Hills. Hills of note are, the Soccoth, on the north, and Luddliek, on the east.
- Its length, from The Cults, east, to Corrachrie, west, is three miles; and from Tindlair, south, to Oldmiln, is about one mile and a half.
- This parioch is fertile of corns, but not weel provided in pasture nor mosses.

THE PARISH OF COULL.<sup>2</sup>

DESCRIPTION OF THE PARIOCH OF COUL.<sup>3</sup> (A.D. M.DCC.XXV.)

COULL parioch has to the north, Lochell and Cushny ; to the south, Aboyn and Glentanar ; to the west, Towy and Tarland ; and to the east, Kincarden O'Neil.

The church stands two miles south from the river Dee, on the side of a loch, called The Loch of Strathnuore,<sup>4</sup> twenty-two miles west-north-west from Aberdeen ; one and a half, west from Aboyn ; two, east from Tarland ; and four, north-west from Kincarden, its presbytery seat.

Seats. Seats in this parioch are : an old ruinous castle, south from the church, called The Castle of Coul ;<sup>1</sup> and, two miles west from it, Wester Coul.

Hills. Hills are Soccoch and Laddlelik, upon the north side of it.

Its length, from The Bloody Burn, east, to Tindlae, west, is three miles. Its

<sup>1</sup> [“ The most remarkable fragment of antiquity in this parish is The Castle of Coull. It is situated about one-fourth of an English mile south of the manse. Not many years ago, there was scarcely any thing to be seen at all, but a number of little green hills, and the remainder of an old wall, about thirty yards long, and ten or twelve feet thick. The ruins were buried in the ground, and might have continued hid from mortal view, had not a scarcity of manure induced people to dig about the old wall for rubbish : in doing this, they came upon the remains of four gates and five turrets, of very extraordinary dimensions. These last, as nearly as can be guessed, for it is impossible to measure them exactly, on account of their broken state, will be about eighteen or twenty feet in diameter. The walls in those places which seem most entire are fifteen feet thick, built with lime and stone throughout. One of the gates, which is not so much demolished as the rest, is closed above, with a Gothic arch of free stone : this gate is nine feet wide, twelve feet high, and fifteen feet thick. The whole work, as far as it can now be traced, appears to have been a square, measuring about fifty yards on each side. It is only a very small portion of it that is yet opened up : three sides of it, in a great measure, are still under ground. Among the rubbish dug up were found several small pieces of silver coin, with this inscription : ‘ Alexander Rex Scotorum.’ ” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. iii., p. 201. Edinb. 1792.) “ Upon a rocky eminence, in the vicinity of the church, may still be seen the remains or rubbish of The Castle of Coull. It appears to have been a fortification of considerable extent and great strength, of square form, with large hexagonal towers at its angles. The fosse may still be distinctly seen. It was the seat of the Durwards, a family once of great influence in this district. It is a common saying still, that ‘ the kirk bell of Coull rings of its own accord when a Durward dies.’ ” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xlvi., p. 959. Edinb. 1843.) See also Collections for a History of the Shires of Aberdeen and Banff, p. 86, note.]

“ About a mile and a half west of the manse, are to be seen the remains of a Druidical temple. The place is called Tamnaverie, which signifies The Hill of Worship ; but there is nothing to be seen but a few large stones, some of them standing upright, others fallen down, without any appearance of figures or inscription.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. iii., p. 201.) “ About half a mile south from the church of Tarland, and in the parish of Coull, there is a small hill or eminence, about one hundred and fifty feet in height above the level of the Tarland burn ; its summit of conical form, about one hundred feet in circumference, consisting of solid rock. On this summit may be seen the distinct ruins of a Druidical temple, containing two circles, formed of large erect stones, at short intervals, from four to five feet in height, three broad, and two feet thick. The hill or eminence is known by the name of Tomnaverie,” etc. (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xlvi., p. 842.)] breadth, from Tirilodge, north, to Wester Coul, south, is four miles. No rivers but the burn of Tarland, for which see Tarland.<sup>1</sup>

This parioch is very fertile in corn, as are all the other parioches of Cromar, (videlicet, Tarland, Coldstane, and Logie, to which some add Aboyn,) but straitned much for pasturage and fewel.

THE PARISHES OF ABOYNE AND GLENTANER.<sup>1</sup>

DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF ABOYN. A.D. M.DCC.XXV. BY MR. WILLIAM ROBERTSON.<sup>2</sup>

HE parish of Aboyne, in the sherifdome of Aberdeen, is bounded on the east, by the parish of Kincardine O'Neil; on the north-east, by the parish of Lumphanan; on the north, by the parish of Coul; on the west, by the parish of Coldstone and Loggy, and part of the parish of Tullich; on the south-west, by the parish of Glentanar; and on the south and south-east, by the parish of Birss.

The church is but a little edifice, and thatched with heather, without a bell, and situate about the midle of the parish, within a short mile eastward of the castle of Aboyn, the residence of the Earl of Aboyn; which is a goodly structure, and lyes pleasantly to the south, being fenced from the north by a hill planted with firs, now fully grown, which is a great ornament and advantage to the place.

Within an eighth part of a mile from that castle, southward, midle way 'twixt and the river Dee, lyes a litle town called Charlestown, so called after the first Charles Earl of Aboyn. It's a burgh of barony, and has pretty good accomodation for passengers, there being a rode from Aberdeen to Bremar going through it, and another from south to north. There is in it a weekly mercat, every Thursday, by which the country is supplyed with all necessarys. There are also two yearly fairs in it; the first, holden the last Tuesday of Aprile, called The Rood Fair; the next, the second Tuesday of October, standing three or four days, called Michael Fair, where there is a horse race, a man race, and woman race. Beside the said town is a milne, slated very beautifull, which goes upon the burn of Charlestown, and is passed at the milne by a timber bridge. The burn runs from north-west to south-east, and a little below Charlestown terminates in Dee, the spring of it flowing from Cromar. Charlestown is distant from Aberdeen, twenty-one miles; from Kincardine church, three miles; from Lumphanan, two long miles; from Coul church, one long mile; from Glentanar, three miles; from Birss church, two short miles, the river intervening.

There is, upon that rode which goes north-westward from Charlestown, at a miles distance, upon a hillside, a well called Mochryhalls Well; besides which is a stone, with the sign of the cross cut on it, which has frequently been removed some distance from the well, but was still found to be brought back in a short time.<sup>1</sup> The rode, near which it is, goes into Cromar.

There is not any other gentleman's dwelling, worth naming, in the said parish: Only it's noticeable that the lands of Balnacraig, (of which Dr. Alexander Gordon, who lives at Balnacraig, but has no other than a country house, is heritor,) are separated from the rest of the parish by the river Dee, and seem rather to belong to Birss than Aboyn.

There are also two other villages, near the remotest skirts of the parish of Birss, belonging to the parish of Aboyn, most of the parish of Birss intervening.

There is a ferry boat on Dee, opposite to Charlestown; and, about a mile and a half above it, is another boat, called Waterside; and another, about three quarters of a mile above that, called The Boat of Miln of Dennity, which rather belongs to Tullich parish.

The parish, on the east, is divided from Kincardine by the burn of Desk, on which is the miln of Desk; and from Tullich, on the west, by another burn, called The Burn of Miln of Dennity, where is also a miln, which will be four long miles from milne of Desk.

<sup>1</sup> [“About a mile and a half north-west from the church, there is a stone, with a cross cut on it, standing near a well. This stone, when removed at some olden time, is said to have been miraculously brought back by Muchrieha, the guardian of the well. Near the cross formerly stood a stone, of considerable size, with a hollow rudely cut in it, called Muchrieha's Chair. This chair some masons, about thirty years ago, split into pieces, to assist in the building of the neighbouring farm-house.

“On a knoll, near Aboyne Castle, stands a sculptured stone, six-and-a-half feet high. This stone formerly stood on an eminence, on the bank of Loch Kinord, and was removed by the Earl of Aboyne from its original site to that which it now occupies, near a small Druidical circle. There is carved on it a cross, curiously and very laboriously cut.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xlii., p. 1059. Edinb. 1843.)]

DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF GLENTANAR. A.D. M.DCC.XXV. BY MR.

THE parish of Glentanar, in the sherifedom of Aberdeen, lying on the south side of Dee, is bounded on the east by the parish of Birss; on the south, with the parish of Lochlee, in Glenesk, severall mountains interveining; on the west, by the parish of Glenmuick; on the north, by the parish of Tullich; and north-east, by the parish of Aboyn.

The church of Glentanar is a little house, thatcht with heather, without a bell, situate on a muir near Dee. Its reported to have had the name of The Black Chappel in the Muir, in our ancient chronicles.

The country is mountainous, not very fertile, the people living more by trafficking in timber, than husbandry. This timber they have from The Wood of Glentanar, which lyes on the south side of the said parish, and is the only ornament of the place. It is very large in extent, and ten or twelve miles in circumference, tho' not full in all places. The timber in this wood, which is all fir, grows to a great height and bigness; the whole country round about being served in fir timber out of it, to the considerable advantage of the Earl of Aboyn, who is heretour of it, as he is of all that parish. There is a small water, called The Water of Tanar, flowing from the wood, and running down through a corner of the parish, called The Glen; which, indeed, is the only pleasant place in the parish, being hedged in on both sides with hills and pleasant corn fields, with severall plats of birch wood. There are two milns within the said glen, served by the said water. There is also a very good inn, at the mouth of the wood, where the forrester lives, called Bordland.

A quarter of a mile above Bordland, lives a gentleman, by sirname Garden, a fewer of a town from the Earl, called Brelyne.

The said water of Tanar is, for ordinary, very impetuous; and, if any ways in speat, is not passable but at Bordland, where is an excellent timber bridge, in form of an arch. About a large half mile below the bridge, the said water terminates in Dee, at a village called Delquhiny. There is a rode passing thro' the wood, from north to south, thence through Glenesk, and so to Brechin, by far nearer than by the Cairn of Mount.

The church of Glentanar is distant from Aberdeen, twenty-four miles; from Kincardine, six miles; from Aboyn, three long miles; from Glenmuick, four miles; and three from Tullich, the nearest way; four, from Birss; and six or seven, from Lochlee.

 "The principal remains of antiquity in this parish [of Migmar] are three Druidical fanes, of which one, near the new church, is remarkably large; and an artificial mount, of considerable magnitude, which is now a part of the glebe. This mount is obviously a work of art. A ditch or trench, that is cast round it, is now covered with grass, from the bottom of which to the summit the perpendicular height is about thirty feet. The acclivity is gentle at the entrance, but steep in every other part. The middle part of the summit contains a cavity, with a small circular rising in its centre. Here tradition reports that criminals were tried, and justice administered. Mr William Meston, professor of philosophy in the Marischal College of Aberdeen, a man of considerable genius, was a native of the parish of Midmar. He was the author of a small collection of poems, of which a sixth edition was published at Edinburgh, in 1767." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. ii., pp. 519, 525. Edinb. 1792.) John Ogilvie, D.D., author of "Britannia," of several other poems, and of some works in criticism and theology, was minister of the parish of Migmar, from the year 1759, to his death, in the year 1813.]

" As the subscriptione of the Covenant did portende the following revolutiones, so ther wanted not prodiges this yeare [1638], which, in ane inarticulat language, foretold the followinge warre and miseryes. I shall not macke mentione of all the visiones of armyes and things of this nature that wer noyded to have been seen and heard in diverse places ; contenting myselfe with the relatione of thes as certaine, which, for the truthe, are above all exceptione and out of questione. Such thinges flowing from no naturall cause, cannot but be esteemed prodigiouse ; amongst which one of the most remarkable was the beating or tucking of drumms frequently heard this winter, 1638, and in the end of the preceeding yeare, 1637, in the countye of Marre, in the north of Scotland, not fully twell myles westwards from Aberdeen. That countreye is hillye and mountainouse ; and ther is a hill, distant but about a myle westward from the mannor place of Eycht : the hill beares the name of Duneycht, (or, to wrytte it truly, Dun Picte). Upon the topp of this swelling hill, (which is situate easterly and contigouse with the mountaines called The Hill of Faire, famouse for the defeate and slaughter of George Earle of Huntly, by James Earle of Murray, at Corrichy, hard by,) ther are to be seen old ruined walles and trenshes, which the people, by a receaved traditione, affirme to have been built at such tyme as the Pictes wer maisters of Marre. Upon the topp of this said hill of Dunieght, it was, that, for the space of all the winter, almost evry night, drumms wer hearde beatne about four a clocke, the parade or reteering of the gwardes, ther taptoos, ther reveilles, and marches, distinctly. And eare wittnesses, souldiours of credite, have told me that, when the parade was beating, they could discerne when the drummer walked towards them, or when he turned about, as the fashion is for drummers, to walk too and again, upon the heade or front of a company drawne upp. At such tymes, also, they could distinguish the marches of severall nationes; and the first marches that wer heard ther was the Scottish marche; afterward the Irish marche was hearde; then the English marche. But before thes noyses ceased, thes who had been trained up much of ther lyves abroad in the German warres, affirmed that they could perfectly, by their hearing, discerne the marches upon the drumme, of severall forraine nationes of Europe, such as Frensh, Dutch, Danes, etc. Thes drumms were so constantly heard, that all the country people next adjacent wer therwith accustomed; and sometymes thes drummers wer heard off that hill, in places two or three myle distant. Some people, in the night, travelling neer by the Loche of Skeene, within three myle of that hill, wer frighted with the lowde noyse of drummes, struck hard by them, which did convey them along the way, but saw nothing; as I had it oftne from such as heard these noyses, from the laird of Skeen and his lady, from the laird Eycht, etc., and my owne wyfe, then living ther in Skeene all that winter, almost immediatly after that the people thus terrified had come and told it with affrightment. Some gentlemen of knowne integritye and truth, affirmed that, neer thes places, they heard as perfect shott of cannon goe off as ever they heard at the Battell of Nordlingen, wher themselves, some yeares befor, had been present." "A mile further on, I cross'd the skirt of a high round hill, called The Barmkin of Echt, on the summit of which are the remains of a Pictish camp; over which, if tradition may be believed, many armies were seen, many drums heard, and many an aerial bloodless battle fought, before the troubles in King Charles the First's time. On the south side of this hill are the ruins of the house of Echt." (Douglas' Description of the East Coast of Scotland, p. 254.) THE PARISH OF CLUNY.<sup>1</sup>

A GEOGRAPHICAL DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF CLUNY. BY MR. JAFFRAY, SCHOOLMASTER OF . . . . . A.D. MDCC.XXII.<sup>2</sup>

LUNY<sup>3</sup> has to the north, the parish of Monymusk ; to the south, Kinnairny and Midmar parishes ; to the east, that of Kemnay, and part of Kinnairny ; and to the west, the parish of Touch.

Gentlemen's seats in it are :

Castle Fraser, one mile and a quarter east from Cluny.

<sup>3</sup> ["The parish of Cluny consists of the old parish of that name, and of the half of the parish of Kinearny thereto annexed, by decree of the court of teinds, in the year 1743 : the other half of Kinearny is annexed to Midmar, and the stipend and glebe thereof possessed by these two ministers respectively.

" There are three Druidical temples in the district, of the usual circular form and size, and three pillars, but without any inscription, one of them ten feet high and five feet broad above ground : it is supposed to be the place at which the vassals of the superior were obliged to assemble, in feudal times. <sup>a</sup> There are also two other pillars, one of them ten feet high, and the other eight, standing near one another, but without any inscription.

About three years ago, in repairing a road, on the top of a sandy eminence, were found two stone coffins, or rather chests, each consisting of four flat stones laid on their edges, with a large flat stone for a cover : in each was found a human skull and several human bones, together with an urn of coarse earth or clay and rude figures, with ashes in each, but different in shape from Roman urns.

" There is a well, called The Tipper Castle Well, generally resorted to some time ago, not for its medicinal virtues, but because of its having been consecrated ; rags, threads, and small oblations in money, were wont to be made at it, so late as the settlement of the present incumbent ; but all these for a considerable time have been effectually abolished.

" The large rivulet or burn of Cluny breeds pearls : some years ago, a Jew employed people to fish them, and a great many were got, some of them large and of a good water, which were carried to London to be disposed of.

Sauchen, half a mile south from Cluny.

The rectified highway, called The Skene Road, from Aberdeen, enters on the south-east side of the parish; and, passing by a village called Drumlahoy, crosses The Burn of Ton, at mill of Clunie, by a good bridge of two arches; thence west to the church, which is about a quarter of a mile west from the house of Clunie, and enters the parish of Monymusk about half a mile to the north-west of the church of Cluny; thence north-west, along betwixt the villages of Todlachy and Tillyfoure, in the parish of Monymusk, till it enters into the parishes of Touch and Keig.

The Burn of Ton rises in the west side of this parish, and runs in several windings east and northward to the mill of Clunie; a little below which, it turns east, and is mostly the boundary of the parish of Monymusk from those of Cluny and Kemnay, till it fall into the river Don, a little below the bridge, on the road from Aberdeen to Monymusk.

"There is a family in the district, of the name of Robertson, originally from Athol, who uninterruptedly have possessed one of the largest farms, from father to son, for a series of upwards of two hundred and thirty years. One of this family was the first protestant incumbent at Cluny after the reformation. An heritor of the district joined himself to the Camissars; and, having wrote down the reveries of these people, as they were uttered, denominated himself clerk to the Holy Ghost." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. x., pp. 245—250. Edinb. 1794.)]

In a roll of missing charters of King David II. is "Carta to William Earl of Sutherland, and Margaret the King's sister, of the barony of Cluny, in vicecomitatu de Aberdein, with the advocation of the kirk." (Robertson's Index to the Charters, p. 32; Miscellany of the Maitland Club, vol. i., p. 361; Sir Robert Gordon's Genealogical History of the Earldom of Sutherland, p. 51. Edinb. 1813. fol.)

"The castle of Cluny has still a double-barred iron gate, weighing thirty-two stones, with massy iron bolts, and the remains of a fosse once full of water. A large meadow of a hundred acres, great part of which was formerly overflowed, and being a marsh, was a defence to the castle, is now perfectly dry, and fit for tillage." THE PARISH OF BANCHORY SAINT TERNAN.<sup>1</sup>

A DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF UPPER BANCHORY, IN THE MERNS.
BY WILLIAM FARQUHAR. (A.D. M.DCC.XXIV.)<sup>2</sup>

HE parish of Upper Banchory, or Banchory Trinity,<sup>3</sup> in The Merns, hath, on the south-west, Strachen; on the south-east, Durres; on the west, Kincardin O'Neill; on the east, Drumkaik; on the north, Eicht.

The church<sup>4</sup> stands in the village of Banchory, on the north side of the river Dee, (an inch straight opposit in the river,) six miles east of Kincairden, twelve miles west of Aberdeen.

<sup>3</sup> ["The latter part of the name of this parish is that of its patron saint. Hence, one of two annual fairs, held near by, is called Saint Tarnan's Market; and a small fountain, not far distant, is called Saint Tarnan's Well." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. vii., p. 369. Edinb. 1793.)]

<sup>4</sup> ["The minister here has the annual rent of a hundred pounds sterling, mortified for his behoof by Dr. Alexander Reid, whose father had been a minister here. The same Dr. Reid mortified a sum for a school for teaching Latin, English, writing, and arithmetic; and two thousand merks for the maintenance of the mistress of a woman's school." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. vii., p. 373.) Alexander Reid, M.D., was born at Banchory St. Ternan, towards the end of the sixteenth century, and died at London, where he had practised medicine with great success, in the year 1640. He published some works in anatomy and surgery, which will be found enumerated in the late Professor Dugald Stewart's Biographical Memoirs of Dr. Adam Smith, Dr. William Robertson, and Dr. Thomas Reid, p. 527. Edinb. 1811. 4to.; and in The Book of Bon-Accord, pp. 313, 314. Aberd. 1839. 8vo. His father, James Reid, was the first minister of the parish of Banchory St. Ternan, after the reformation; his eldest brother, Robert, succeeded to that benefice; and another brother, Dr. Thomas Reid, was secretary in the Greek and Latin tongues to King James VI. The benefactions which Dr. Alexander Reid bestowed on the place of his birth are thus commemorated by a contemporary: "Ante omnia loco natali, ut par erat, gratificari satagens, ibi aperiendam curavit, sumptu haud modico, scholam illustrem et liberam, structurae splendore, redditum copia, librorum supellectile, et alumnorum numero insignem: qualem nullam in villis aut pagis nostrae patriae videbitis: imo quae fere, titulis omnibus commemoratis, scholas plerasque urbicas non solum adaequet, sed et superet. Ptochodochium etiam ibi extruendum curavit, quod idoneis redditibus auxit, ut viris, pueris, hominibus omnium ordinum benefacere possit." (Andreac

Reamore is two miles north of Banchory, and two miles north-west of Crathes. It has The Hill of Fair to the north.

Inchmarloch is one mile west-north-west of Banchory. Here is the wood of Glencomon, to the west, one mile long, and half a mile broad.

Tilliquhilly is on the south side of Dee, one mile distant from and opposit to Banchory. A moss, south therfrom three quarters of a mile, is called The Mulloch.

Two passage boats cross the river, a little above the village ; the one below the water of Feuch, which falls into the river there, (a very little above Banchory, on the south side of the river Dee,) and the other immediatly above.

A little above the said infall of the river Feuch is the wood of Invery, closs on the river, about half a mile long and broad.

A mile north of Banchory are two lochs,<sup>2</sup> very near to each other. The George Campbell, D.D., principal of The Marischal College from the year 1759 to the year 1795, the author of The Philosophy of Rhetoric, and of other well-known works, was minister of the parish of Banchory St. Ternan, from the year 1749 to the year 1757.]

<sup>2</sup> [“ There is a loch called The Loch of Drum, between two and three miles in circuit, at the eastern extremity ; and another, of the same dimensions, near the middle of largest, which is to the east, and is about a mile round, has in it a rising ground, with the vestiges of an old house and garden. It produceth pykes, eells, and trout. Out of the west end of this loch runs a burn, which falls into the river Dee, half a mile east of Banchory; and out of the east end runs another, which joyns with the former, about half a mile distant from the loch. The first of these burns is called The Burn of Beany; the other has no name, being but newly made, for draining of the said loch.

The other of these lochs, which is a little west from the bigest, is inclosed with a large firr and peat moss. Between the lochs are two ditches.

There is a burn which falls from the west end of The Hill of Fair, runs into the water of Dee, called The Burn of Canny, two miles west of Banchory. It has two milnes, one a little above where it joyns with Dee, the other half a mile distant from the former.

" Junii 12. S. Tarnane archbisshop of the Pichtes ordineit be S. Padie vnder King Eugenius 2. A.D. 455." (Adam King's Kalendar, 1588.)

" S. Tervanus, [i. Ternanus], S. Palladii Scotorum apostoli discipulus, S. Servani Orcadum apostoli collega, et Pictorum apostolus, quos, idolorum ea adhuc aetate cultui deditos, incredibili studio morumque sanctimonia ad veram religionem convertit. Joanni Leslaeo archiepiscopus est, lib. iv., pag. 137. Hect. Boeth. lib. vii. Histor. Scot. in fine. Hunc, etsi Martyrologii tabulis non ascriptum, nostre religiosa semper obsequio coluerunt; templumque Abernethiae cathedrale ei dicatum, ac multa alia in eo regno. Scripsit: 'Exhortationes ad Pictos, lib. i.; Contra Pelagianos, lib. i.; Homilias ex Sacra Scriptura, lib. i.' Claruit anno ccccxl. " 12 die Junii. Sanctus Ternanus episcopus et confessor, et post Ninianum sanctum admonitus baptizauit et sufficienter instruxit . Audiens itaque puer sanctus magni Gregorij famam pecuit Romam optans in omnibus verbo et ope eius

Pictorum australium veluti apostolus. Hic a Sancto Palladio cum quo annos integros in erudiendis Scotis peregrinatus, missus est ad Pictos in fide Catholica confirmandos, et ad Pelagij haeresim, quae quorundam Pictorum animis inhaeserat ob mutuum cum Britonibus commercium, euellendam. In quo opere adeo apostolice se gessit, vt Pictorum animos mirum in modum in Dei amorem inflamarit, sibique deuinixerit, eumque summa reuerentia et honore instar apostoli postea coluerint. Fuit Ternanus sanctus instituto Culdaeus, et inter Culdaeos patres a tenella aetate in celebri Culrossano monasterio educatus. Vide de ipso Middendorpium, lib. 8. Academiarum; Leslaeum in Historia Scotica; Boetium; du Chesne, et alios." (D. Camerarii De Scotorvm Fortividine, pp. 156, 157. Parisiis, 1631. 4to.) See also G. "S. Ternan is said to have been a Culdee, bred in Culross, and the companion of S. Palladius in his labours, by whom he was appointed to travel for the recovery of that nation from Pelagianism (Camerarius); so that, having at last succeeded that saint, he is by some styled Archbishop of the Picts. He was consecrated by S. Palladius, and flourished about the middle of the fifth century. (King's Calendar.) The collect for his day, used in the diocese of S. Andrews, is this: 'Deus qui Beatum Terrenanum Pictorum archipresulem tua prouidencia sublimasti ut Pictos in tenebris sue gentilitatis errantes ad verum tue diuinitatis lumen perduceret: tribue nobis quesumus ut ejus gloriosis precibus et meritis a presentis vite periculis et a gehenne incendijs liberemur.' (Missale de Arbutnott.) And his hymn this:

'Almi patris Terrenani
Attollamus Christiani
Laudes et preconia.'

Ipsum pie deprecemur
In hac die veneremur
Ejusque solennia .

Vas et lampas sanctitatis
Pacis se per claritatis
Diregebat federa .

Nostre matris ardens zelo
Lucis fulgens nunc in celo
Decorantur opera .

Presulatus hic honore
Dei plebis et amore
Fama creuit lucida .

'Sydus tale sibi datum
Celum gaudet: fore natum
Gaudet et Albania.'

Carnem freno castitatis
Vas ut esset puritatis
Edomare studuit .

Inter Sanctos numerari
Et in luce collocari
Celesti promeruit .

Hic egenos releuauit
Cibis / potu satiauit /
Nudis vestem tribuit .

Prudens pius castus mitis /
Palmes crescens vere vitis /
Virtus ejus claruit .

subici disciplinis . Cuius propositum cum Beatus audisset Gregorius eum honorifice suscepit et post septennium ad episcopalem gradum promotum ad propria remisit ut euangeliu[m] incredulis predicaret . Quoddam tintinnabulum Beatus Gregorius sibi donauit quod sibi et sociis pro nimio pondere onerosum existens post se reliquit . Transacta vero sequenti nocte ubi fuerant hospitati ad caput Sancti Ternani diuinitus allatam campanam mane aspexerunt sique virum sanctum de die in diem secuta est usque ad Albaniam . Vernali tempore Sanctus Macharius ad Beatum Ternanum misit ut de suis seminibus sibi mitteret . Qui non habens saccos arena perimplens sibi destinauit . Videns Macharius beati viri fidem pro naturali semine arenam seminauit que meritis sanctorum presulum messis optima crevit .

THE PARISH OF STRACHAN.<sup>1</sup>

A DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF STRACHAN, IN THE MERNs.
BY MR. FARQUHAR. A.D. M.DCC.XXIV.<sup>2</sup>

HE parish of Strachan, in The Merns, hath, on the south, the Grampian hills, above Fettercairn; on the west, Birss, in Aberdeenshire; on the north, Trinity Banchory; on the east, Durres.

The church stands near the north-west syde of the parish, on the water of Feuch, two miles south-south-west of Banchory.

The house of Blackhall is closs on the north side of Dee, a mile and a half north-north-west of the church. Here is, at the east thereof, the wood of Blackhall, about three quarters of a mile long, and half a mile broad.

Cutties-hillock is a publick house, a mile and a half south-west of the church, and stands on a publick highway, which passes north over The Carne of Month,<sup>3</sup> above and below which are timber growing. On which road, and in <sup>3</sup> ["November 9, A.D. 1729. Mr William Brown tells me the following accompt he had, when last in Perth, from Mr James Mercer, minister at Aberdalgie, as what was generally believed as to Dr Rule, principal [of the College] at Edinburgh [from A.D. 1690 to A.D. 1709]; and the thing was so notour that it could not miss to be observed. The Doctor hapned to be going to the north, to some church meeting, and road with a servant; came to knouen Carnie Mount, that lyes in the high and nearest road. Before the Doctor gote to the foot of The Mount, it was turning dark, and the night drawing on him. Ther is a change-house at the foot of The Carnie Mount, wher he expected lodging. When he came there, the landlord told him ther was not a bitt of room for him in the house; that the shirrefe of the shire, and a good number of the gentlemen about, wer to lodge with him, and he expected neither he nor any of the family could have a bed that night. The Doctor told him hou unwilling he was to venture throu The Mount so late, and asked the landlord if he knew of no remedy for him; that he would be glad of any place where he could be free of the open air, and his horses have meet. The landlord said, he could find room for his horses, and they should be weel enough: for himself, he knew no place for him, unless he pleased to lye in yonder large house, about a quarter or half a mile distance, and he should take care to send over bed-cloaths, and a fire and candles: only, he told him, it had not been inhabited for thirty years, and it was said to be haunted with an apparition.

said parish, are the bridge of Feuch, on the water of that name, two miles west of the church ; and the stone bridge of Dye, on the water of Dye, of one arch, where is a publick house also of that name, three miles south-west of the

The Doctor said, if no better might be, he would rather chuse that than to stay in the open air. His servant, however, would not go.

“ The landlord was as good as his word ; sent over his servants with bed-cloaths, fire, and candles ; and the Doctor went over. The house was a good house, and the rooms good. After his room was ordered, and every thing well, he was left alone in it. He walked some time in the room, and committed himself to God's protection, and went to bed. Ther was two candles he left on the table, and these he put out. Ther was a large bright fire remaining. He had not been long in bed till the room dore is opened, and an apparition, in shape of a country tradsman, came in, and opened the curtains, without speaking a word. Mr Rule was resolved to do nothing till it should speak or attack him, but lay still with full composure, committing himself to the divine protection and conduct. The apparition went to the table, lighted the two candles, brought them to the bed-side, and made some steps toward the dore, looking still to the bed, as if he would have had Mr Rule rising and following. Mr Rule still lay still till he should see his way further cleared. Then the apparition, who the whole time spoke none, took an effectuall way to raise the Doctor. He caryed back the candles to the table, and went to the fire, and, with the tongs, took doun the kindled coals, and laid them on the deal chamber floor. The Doctor, then, thought it time to rise, and put on his cloaths ; in the time of which the spectre laid up the coals again in the chimney, and, going to the table, lifted the candles, and went to the dore, opened it, still looking to the Principal, as he would have him following the candles ; which he nou, thinking there was somewhat extraordinary in the case, after looking to God for direction, inclined to do. The apparition went doun some steps with the candles, and caryed them in to a long trance, at the end of which ther was a stair, which carried doun to a lou room. This the specter went doun, and stooped and set doun the lights on the louest step of the stair, and streight disappeared. Mr Rule, after a litle waiting to see if any further should cast up, lifted the candles, went up, the way he came, to his room, and went to his bed again, wher he was no more disturbed.

“ Revolving in his thoughts what had passed, the Doctor began to think there was murder in the case. In the morning, the landlord came over to see hou his guest was, and hou he had rested. The Principal told him he was very weel, and asked him if the shirriff was still with him. The other answered he was. The Principal desired him to give his service to him, and to tell him who he was, a minister and Principal at Edinburgh, and tell him he would willingly see him in the house wher he was ; but if that wer uneasy, he could come to him, because he had somewhat of weight to communicat. The shirriff came over, and Mr Rule told him what had hapned, just as above, and that he was much of the mind ther was murder in the case. The shirrif said it might be so, but it was certainly long since, for it was upwards of twenty, near thirty, years since that hous was uninhabited. The other begged the shirriff to cause lift the stone and open the earth where the candles wer left by the spectre ; and he yielded. When the ground was opened, the plain remains of a human body wer found, and bones, to the conviction of all.

church. The bridge of Dye is from Cuttie's-hillock one mile and a half south. The water is also of that name, and falls from the mountains westward, running in a glen<sup>1</sup> about five miles, till it falls into Feuch, a quarter of a mile west of the church.

Dr Rule next intreated the shirrife that he would send orders to the country people, especially such above thirty or forty, to come to the place, and he would give them a sermon, and see if any hint could be had of the murder. The shirriff was not for this, and insisted that the murder was certainly so old that nobody now could probably give any account of it. The Doctor insisted there was no hazard of their meeting for a sermon, and we did not know what providence might discover. The shirriff condescended, and that day warning was sent for some miles about. The people conveened; the Doctor preached upon some subject suitable to the occasion, and told what had hapned, and earnestly dealt with the consciences of his hearers, if they knew any thing of that murder to acknowledge it, nou that God, in his providence, had brought it to light. In the time of his sermon, an old man, near eighty years, was awakned, and fell a weeping, and, before all the company, acknowledged that, at the building of that house, he was the murderer. He and one of his fellow masons fell into a debate, and came to high words, on a summer morning, when the rest of the workmen wer not come up to their work; and he killed the man with one stroak of a hammer, and buried him under the first step of the stair; and the matter was never known. My informer knoues no more of what followed, whither the murderer was punished, and, as is probable, dyed penitent." (Analecta: or Materials for a History of Remarkable Providences, mostly relating to Scotch Ministers and Christians. By the Rev. Robert Wodrow, minister of the gospel at Eastwood, vol. iv., pp. 87—90. Printed for the Maitland Club. 1843. 4to.)

" Though there is a good road over The Cairn o' Mount, it is in some places very steep. Though I apprehended no danger from robbers in crossing the mountaint, I recollect a circumstance which happened to an Aberdeen gentleman about thirty years ago. About the middle of The Mount he overtook a single foot passenger, and was very glad to keep company with him, as he dreaded falling in with a set of vagrants, who had long infested the country, called Gun's crew, then said to be in that corner. The gentleman asked his fellow-traveller what he heard of these people. ' They have been seen in this country very lately,' said he, ' but I hope we shall meet with no trouble.' A little before they reached the foot of the hill, the stranger turned off at a cross road, and, to the gentleman's great surprise, took leave of him, in words to this effect: ' You are now, sir, out of danger of John Gun's crew, but, though you had met with them, you would have sustained no damage while under my protection, for I am the very man of whom you were afraid.' The poor man was apprehended some years after, and tried for his life, at Aberdeen, by the lords of justiciary, when this story was depos'd to, in exculpation of his character. He was condemned to die, but, on application to his Majesty, the sentence was commuted into banishment." (F. Douglas' General Description of the East Coast of Scotland, pp. 273, 274.) See Sir Walter Scott's Lady of the Lake, cant. v., stanzas viii—xi., and note.]

There is another bridge on Spittelburn, on the said highway, one mile south-west of the church. The bridge of Spittleburn is, from bridge of Dye, one mile south.

There is another bridge on Feuch, called of Feuch or Whitestain, one mile west of the church; one end whereof stands in Aberdeenshire, and the other in that of The Mearns.

The burn of Camie, in parish of Strachan, runs from the hills, north-north-west, and falls into the south-east side of Feuch, a little below the church, with a stone bridge of one arch, a little before the infall into Feuch.

There stands a great high hill, with a big stone on the top thereof, called Clach-na-bane, four miles south-west of the church, and on the north syde of the water of Dye, about a mile therfrom. From the foot of the said hill, runs another water, north-north-east, till it falls into Feuch, a quarter of a mile above the bridge of Feuch, called the water of Auen; from which it is thought the parish had first its name.

The house of Gellan is one mile south-east of the church, with some timber about it, and on the north syde of Feuch, half a mile distant therfrom.

THE PARISH OF THE BIRSE.<sup>1</sup>

A DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF BIRSE.<sup>2</sup> (A.D. M.DCC.LXI.)

HE parish of Birse, in the shire of Aberdeen, has, on the north, the parish of Kincardine O'Neil; on the north-west, the parish of Aboyne; on the west, the parish of Glen-taner; on the south and south-west, the Grampian hills, part of which is called The Forest of Birse, where formerly most of the parishioners drove their cattle to graze all summer; but now it is inhabited by Highlanders, from the head of Dee, who have cultivated some parts of the barren ground, by which the summer grazing is much obstructed. In that Forest stands the remains of an old castle: on what occasion or for what purpose it was built does not appear.<sup>3</sup> The parish of Birse has, on the east, the parish of Strachan.

<sup>3</sup> ["In The Forest, or Glen-Birse, there is standing a good part of a castle, which was built by Gordon of Cluny, for a hunting seat, and which is now by the tenant converted into a sheep cot." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. ix., p. 127. Edinb. 1793. See also The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxix., p. 792. Edinb. 1842.) "The Forest of Birse, with the baill parish of Birse, consisting of twenty-four towns, were feued out by the Bishops of Aberdeen; and, betwixt the years 1574 and 1636, came all into the person of Gordon of Cluny, except six towns, called Kenminny, Tilly-naught, Tillyfrosky, Enderchat, Tillygarmount, and Belfedy. The family of Cluny, while in possession of eighteen of the twenty-four towns, about the year 1610, did make encroachments upon The Forest, by building a castle, and enclosing a part thereof, called Haughspittal and Cranna, by force and violence, in opposition to the heritors of The Six

The kirk<sup>1</sup> stands in the west end of the parish, on the south side of the river Dee, and is covered with heather.

The parish is divided into three divisions.

That part of it that lies in the west end of the parish, and nearest the kirk, is commonly called The Six Towns. In this part of the parish is Birsebeg, situated about half a mile west from the kirk. It was formerly the seat of Alexander Ross of Birsebeg, esquire; and is now the property of the Earl of Aboyne. About half a mile to the south-west of Birsebeg, is New Miln, the property of Mr. William Ross, teacher of an academy at London. About half a mile east from New Miln, is Balfour, the seat of Alexander Farquharson, esquire.

The second division is about the middle of the parish, situated along the banks of a fine burn, which takes its rise a little above a place called Glencate, about two miles south-west from the kirk, and runs due east about four miles, and then loses itself in the river Dee, four miles above the kirk of Banchory Ternan. This division is commonly called The Burn of Catie. In this quarter is Tillysnaught,<sup>2</sup> the seat of Thomas Forbes, esquire, situated on the bank of this burn, and about one mile south from the kirk. About half a mile east from Tillysnaught, is Midstrath, the property of Peter Young, esquire; and about half a mile east from Midstrath, is Inverquhate, the property of the laird of Finzean.

The third division is separated from the rest of the parish by a hill, called Cross-Dardar. On this hill there are some very large cairns of stones, and on the road-side, a large stone, set up on one end, called The Stone of Cross-Dardar. How, or on what occasion these great cairns of stones were gathered together, we have no account.<sup>3</sup> Through this part of the parish runs the water of Towns, who were then very poor, notwithstanding their rights to the said Forest were anterior to those of the family, and universal over the whole Forest. It is informed that, about the year 1640, the heritors of the said towns vindicated their right to the said Forest by burning the castle built by Cluny, and by turning his laboured ground again into commony, and continued so to possess for fourscore years afterwards." (Memorial for the Feuars of The Birse, 1755, MS. in private hands.)]

<sup>1</sup> ["In the year 1779, when they were razing the foundation of the old church, there was found a hill stone, near six feet long, with a two-handed long sword, a hatchet, and a cross carved upon it. The stone is now set up erect in the wall of the churchyard." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. ix., p. 127.)]

<sup>3</sup> ["On the hill, about a mile north-east of Finzean, bearing the name of Corse Dardar, there is a place marked near the way-side with a long granite stone, which lately stood

Feugh. It takes its rise in The Forest of Birse, and, after a long tract thro' the hills, running due east, waters that part of the parish, and is joined by another water, called Avin, a little above a house called Whitestone, which is the east boundary of the parish of Birse. Betwixt that and the kirk of Strachan, it is joined by another water, called Dye; and, after running thro' the parish of Strachan to the east, it falls into the river Dee, at the kirk of Banchory Ternan. This division of the parish of Birse, as it lies south-east from the kirk, is commonly called The East Side of the Hill. In this division is Finzean,<sup>1</sup> about three-fourths of a mile south-west from Midstrath, the seat of Francis Farquharson, esquire. Half a mile south from Finzean, is Westercleen, on the south side of the water of Feugh; and half a mile east from Westercleen, is Eastercleen,<sup>2</sup> on the same side of the water; and a mile from Finzean, due east, on erect, but now broken down. At a small distance from this spot are two cairns, one very large, and in form oblong: they are now covered by the woods of Finzean. On the top of the hill named Cairn Ferg, there is a large cairn, of a conical shape. In various places there are several huge stones lying above the ground: a few, near Inchbair, seem to have been a Druidical temple." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. ix., pp. 126, 127.)]

<sup>2</sup> ["At Easter Clune there are the small remains of a square tower, said to have been built by Archbishop Ross, who was proprietor of the place." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. ix., p. 127.) See above, p. 43, note. "An imperfect ruin stands near Easter Clune, beside which had also existed formerly an Episcopal place of worship, and a small burying-ground." (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxix., p. 792.)

"Besides Archbishop Ross, to whom the tower of Easter Clune belonged, and who was a native of Birse, the parish has given birth to some others, whose names deserve to be mentioned. Dr. Alexander Garden, <sup>a</sup> late of Charlestown, South Carolina, eminent for his skill as a physician, caused a monument, with an inscription in Latin, to be erected in front of the church here, to the memory of Mr. Alexander Garden, his father, who was upwards of fifty years minister of this parish. The famous George Rose, esquire, of the Treasury, is grandson to the late Donald Rose of Wester Clune. Captain David Ochterlounie, [of the family of Tillyfrosky,] mortally wounded and taken prisoner at the first attack on Quebec, was so much the favourite of General Wolfe, that he sent to the town to the Marquis de Montcalm, desiring that particular care should be taken of him." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. ix., pp. 127, 128.) "To these may be added, the

the north side of the water of Feugh, is Tillyfroskie. All these places are now the property of the laird of Finzean.

THE PARISHES OF GLENMUICK, TULLICH, AND GLENGARDEN.<sup>1</sup>

(A.D. M.DCC.XXXVI.)

HESE three united parishes are situate in the shire, diocese, and commissariat of Aberdeen, and presbytery of Kin-cardin.

Glenmuick is so named from the water of Muick, which runs out of Loch Muick, (two miles long,) and, after a course of five miles, falls into the river Dee. The parish of Glenmuick lyes on the south side of Dee, and consists of three different vallies :

1. Glen-Muick itself, which lyes on each side of the impetuous river Muick, which runs down from the Grampian mountains from south-west to north-east ; and the highest inhabited room in it is The 'Spittal, six miles above the church.

2. Inchmarnach, three miles to the east from Glenmuick.

3. Atnach, a small valley possess'd by five family's.

The number of examinable persons in the above three united parishes is sixteen hundred and eleven ; whereof three hundred and eighty-three are papists.

PR. OF KINCARDINE—GLENMUICK, TULLICH, GLENGARDEN. 81

The kirk of Glenmuick is dedicate to the Blessed Virgin Mary<sup>1</sup>; Tullich, to St. Nachlan<sup>2</sup>; and Glen-garden, to St. Mungo, Bishop of Glasgow.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> [“The church of Glenmuick, a very old house, thatched with heath, seems to have been dedicated to the Virgin Mary, from an annual meeting of the inhabitants on Candlemas day. There are two ruins in this parish: the one, about a mile north-west of the church, called The Castle of the Cnoc, a Gaelic word signifying a hill, upon the top of which the ruin stands; the other, in the eastern extremity of the parish, called Dee Castle, formerly Candacoil.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xii., pp. 222, 224. Edinb. 1794.)]

<sup>2</sup> [“The church of Tulloch is said to have been founded by St. Nethalan; and an annual meeting of the inhabitants is regularly kept on the eighth of January, in honour of his memory. It is termed the mother church. In the lower end of this parish, at the foot of the hill of Culblean, there is a beautiful lake, of about three miles in circumference, called Loch Cannor, containing several small islands, upon the largest of which there stood formerly a small fortress. The stones are now all cleared out; and the island, which measures near an acre, is under culture. The people, some years since, were in use to drag up large planks of oak from the bottom of the lake, between the island and the main land on the north side, evidently part of a drawbridge between the island and the shore. There is a stone set on its end on the north bank of the lake, fronting the island, with a great deal of carving upon it; but the figures are now unintelligible.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xii., pp. 224, 225.) See as to the Castle or Peel of Loch Cannor, Wyntownis Cronykil, book viii., cap. xxxi., ll. 101—106; J. Forduni Scotichronicon, lib. xiii., cap. xxxvi., vol. ii., p. 321. edit. Hist., lib. ix., cap. xxiii.; James Man’s Censure and Examination of Mr. Thomas Ruddiman’s Notes on the Works of Buchanan, p. 337. Aberdeen, 1753. 8vo.: “the inhabitants thereabouts call it Loch Keandor, in the south-west corner of Cromar; and I am told that the ruins of a castle, at which there was some action in the last century, are still to be seen in that loch, on the side of which there is a farm called Kean-ord, and hard by it another loch called Lochdawin, both about six miles from the castle of Kildrumie.” In the spring of the year 1647, the army of the rebel Scottish parliament “tooke the Isle of Loghcannor, in Aboyn, which Huntley had fortified.” (Sir Robert Gordon’s Genealogical History of the Earldom of Sutherland, p. 537.)]

<sup>3</sup> [“The church of Glengairn seems to have been dedicated to St. Mungo, from an annual meeting of the parishioners on the thirteenth of January.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xii., p. 226.)]

THE PARISHES OF CRATHIE AND KINDROCHT (OR BRAEMAR.)<sup>1</sup>

A DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISHES OF CRATHIE AND KINDROCHIT.<sup>2</sup>
 (A.D. M.DCC.XXXVI.)

RATHIE and Kindroghit are united parishes, in the shire, diocese, and commissariot of Aberdeen, and presbytery of Kincardine O'Neil.

Both these parishes ly in Mar; and are from Ballachaillich, east, to Leadolly, west, sixteen miles and an half in length, and about four miles broad in some places, but generally does not exceed one mile along the course of the river Dee, which extends itself from one end to the other of these parishes.

Examinable persons in this united parish are seventeen hundred and thirty-eight; whereof eleven hundred and ninety-six are protestants, and five hundred and forty-two, papists.

Here are two places of worship: the kirk of Crathie, where the minister's manse is; and the kirk of Kindrochit, six miles distant from Crathie; and the minister preaches in them by turns.<sup>3</sup>

To understand aright the description of these parishes, it is necessary to mention the small straths on both sides, whose waters fall into Dee on both sides, and give name to these straths, beginning at the east end, and going on to the west.

At the east end of these parishes, Girnaig, a small water, (giving name to Strath-Girnaig,) runs into Dee from the south hills. Along, on one side of this water, are five dwelling places, situate among mountains, the farthest of which is two miles from that part of Dee to which this water runs.

From the eastmost end of these parishes, along the river Dee, to the kirk of Crathie, westward, are three miles. From thence, a corner of these parishes runs up among the hills, on the north side of Dee, as far as to the water of Garden, to the number of five miles. In this are ten dwelling places, some of them situate on each side of the water of Gairdin, and others of them scatter'd, here and there, att the foot of the mountains.

From the kirk of Crathie to Monaltry, westward, along the river Dee, will be a large mile : from thence, along the water of Gelder, on the south side of Dee, are two dwelling places, att one miles distance from the mouth of Gelder.

From Monaltry, along the river Dee westward, is near a mile to Inver, where the water of Ferdur falls into Dee : in Glenfardur, along both sides of this water, are ten different dwelling places, some of them att two miles distance from Inver, among hills on the north side of Dee.

From Inver to the kirk of Brae-Mar, or Kindrochit, along the river Dee, westward, are four miles. A little to the westward of this kirk, the water of Cluny falls into Dee, from the south hills ; and along both sides of this water are twelve dwelling places, some of them five miles from its fall into Dee.

From the kirk of Kindrochit, along the river Dee, to Alanquoich, westward, are two miles. Here the water of Quhoich, or Coich, falls into Dee from the north hills ; and on it there is only one dwelling, att the distance of a mile and a quarter from the embucheur of Coich.

From Alanquoich to Inver-Ey, west, are two miles, where the water of Eye falls into Dee from the south hills ; and on both sides of this water are five different dwelling places, the furthest of them three miles from the embucheur of Eye into Dee.

A little to the west of Inver-Ey, on the north side of Dee, the water of Luy runs into Dee. Along both sides of this water are five different dwellings, one of them three miles from that part of Dee into which Luy falls.

From Inver-Ey to Lead-yolley, along the river, westward, are three miles and a half. Here are several dwelling places, on both sides of Dee, amongst rugged hills ; and this is the furthest habitable part of these parishes westward ; but Brae-Mar reaches fifteen miles farther, but quite uninhabited, being lost as it were in a wild desert.

Formerly the Earl of Mar, now [William] Duff, Lord Bracco, is superior of most of these parishes.

Of both which parishes, having said so far in general, I shall now treat particularly ; and, first, as to

BRAE-MAR OR KINDROCHIT.

It is called Brae-Mar, because it is the uppermost part of that division of Aberdeenshire called Mar ; and Kindrochit, id est Bridge-end, because the church stands at the end of a timber bridge over Cluny, which gives name to Glen-Cluny, and runs here into Dee.

Chappels in Kindrochit are :

1. Eglis-kean-na-dallach, an old chappell at Dalmore.

2. Chappell of the Seven Maidens, at Inverey, where that family bury their dead.

3. Saint Bride's, at Crochauli.

4. Att Tom-an-taul.

5. At Balanard, two miles beneath the church, on Deeside ; and

6. At Guastoch, five miles beneath the church, on Deeside.

There is also an Hospital here at Cairnwall, (called Shean-Spiddal, or old hospital,) where there is a road over the Grampian hills.

Mannors here are :

1. Inver-cauld, belonging to John Farquharson of Inver-cauld, commonly reckon'd chief of that name.

2. Inver-Ey, the seat of Charles Farquharson of Inver-Ey.

3. Auchindrein, the seat of Farquharson of Auchindrein.

4. Coldarach, the seat of Farquharson of Coldarach.

5. Allanquhoich, the seat of Farquharson of Allanquhoich.

6. Dalmore, the seat of M'Kenzie of Dalmore.

7. The King's Castle at Kindrochit or Castle-town, now ruinous, said to have been built by King Malcolm III.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> [" There is, upon the estate of Castletown of Braemar, the ruins of an ancient castle, built, as tradition reports, by King Malcolm Kenmore for a hunting seat. It stood on the top of a rock on the east side of the water of Cluny." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xiv., p. 350. Edinb. 1795.)

Kindrocht in Mar appears to have been often visited by King Robert II. Charters are extant, granted by him there, on the tenth of July, 1373 ; on the twenty-sixth of July, and the twenty-sixth of August, 1377 ; on the fourth of July, 1379 ; on the first and twentieth of August, 1380 ; and on the thirtieth of August, 1382. (Registrum Magni Sigilli Regvm Scotorvm, pp. 99, 148, 171, 143, 164, 165 ; Kennedy's Annals of Aberdeen, vol. i., p. 478 ; Collections for a History of the Shires of Aberdeen and Banff, p. 316.) On the twenty-sixth of August, 1377, the King was attended by William, bishop of Saint

CRATHIE OR STRATHDEE.

The parish of Crathie is sometimes called Strath-Dee, because it is a plain along Dee; but that name extends somewhat further than Crathie parish.

In Crathie are four chappells:

1. Of the Hermites, att Miacra or Micras.
2. St. Valentine's, att Abergeldie.
3. . . . . , at Aberardour.
4. At Balmurrell.

Mannors here are:

1. Abergeldie, the seat of Gordon of Abergeldy: the old castle here is ruinous.
2. Monaltrie,<sup>1</sup> belonging to Farquharson of Monaltrie, brother to Invercauld.
3. Aber-ardour, belonging to Inver-cauld.
4. Bal-murrel, the seat of Farquharson of Bal-murrel, brother to Inver-Ey.
5. Tulloch-coy, belonging to Farquharson of Tulloch-coy.

The kirk of Crathie is dedicate to St. Niniar or St. Manir;<sup>2</sup> the kirk of Kindrochit, to St. Andrew the Apostle.

The stipend of both parishes, by a decree of locality in King George the First's time, is eight hundred merks, besides communion elements.

Andrews; by John earl of Carric, steward of Scotland; Robert earl of Fife and Mensteth; William earl of Douglas; John of Peblys, archdeacon of Saint Andrews, the King's chancellor; Sir James of Lyndesay, knight; and Sir Alexander of Lyndesay, knight. The same King granted a charter at Glenshee, on the twenty-seventh of June, 1376. (Registrum Magni Sigilli Regum Scotorum, p. 131.)]

<sup>1</sup> [“On the lands of Monaltry, and on the north bank of the river Dee, in a narrow pass, where there is not above sixty yards from the river to the foot of a high, steep, rocky hill, stands a cairn, known by the name of Carn-na-cuimhne, or cairn of remembrance. This is the watch word of the country. In former times, the moment the alarm was given that danger was apprehended, a stake of wood, the one end dipped in blood, and the other burnt, as an emblem of fire and sword, was put into the hands of the person nearest to where the alarm was given, who immediately ran with all speed, and gave it to his nearest neighbour, whether man or woman: that person ran to the next village or cottage, and so on, till they went through the whole country; upon which every man instantly laid hold of his arms and repaired to Cairn-na-cuimhne. The stake of wood was called Croishtarich. At this day, were a fray or squabble to happen at a market or any public meeting, such influence has this word over the minds of the country people, that the very mention of Cairn-na-cuimhne would, in a moment, collect all the people of this country who happened to be present, to the assistance of the person assailed.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xiv., pp. 351, 352.)]

THE PRESBYTERY OF FORDYCE.

THE PARISH OF FORDYCE.<sup>1</sup>

A DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF FORDYCE. BY MR. WILLIAM OGILVY.
A.D. M.DCC.XXIV.<sup>2</sup>

HE church standeth in a little village called Fordyce,<sup>3</sup> where ther's a good house belonging to the Earl of Findlater; and another to Glassah, with several other good houses, stands on a little burn west from the village, which burn is called The Burn of Fordyce, hath in it plenty of trouts, and runneth straight to the sea.

North-east from the church one myle, and half way betwixt it and the sea, is the dwelling house of Abercrumby of Glassah.

“The parish of Fordyce seems to have comprehended originally the parishes of Ordibill, Deskford, and Cullen. When the disjunction of these took place cannot be positively ascertained; but from a decree of stipend for Fordyce in the year 1618, it appears to have been subsequent to that period.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii., p. 183. Edinb. 1842.)]

<sup>3</sup> [“The Kirktown of Fordyce was erected into a burgh of barony, at the instance of William Elphinstone bishop of Aberdeen, in the year 1499, with the privilege of a weekly market, and an annual fair appointed to be held in Festo Sancti Tallericani [30 Octob.] et per octavas ejusdem. Saint Tallerican, or Tarkin, seems to have been the patron saint of the parish; and a well is still called by his name. In a later charter, granted in 1592, to Menzies of Durn, the annual fair is appointed to be held ad Festum Omnium Sanctorum [1 Novemb.] vulgo All-Hallowmes per spatiū octo dierum. (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. iii., pp. 62, 63, 64, 59. Edinb. 1792.) On the ninth of January, 1683, Alexander Hay of Monktonoune was served heir to Alexander Hay of Monktonoune his father, “in mansione cum torrili quae ad clericos parochiales de Fordyce pertinuerunt; acris terrarum nuncupatis Clerks Croft, et ruda terrae vocata Ruid Rigg, cum decimis garbalibus, pastura, et libertate focalium in villa de Fordyce, in dominio de Fordyce et parochia ejusdem.” (Inquisitionem ad capellam Domini Regis retornatarvm, quae in publicis archivis Scotiae adhuc servantvr, Abbrevatio, inquisit. special. vicecomit. de Banff. n. 144. Printed by command of His Majesty King George III. 1811. fol.)]

The parish is bounded by the sea, from about a furlong from Cullen on the west, to the north and east, as far as to The Burn of Boyne, four myles.

From the town of Fordyce to the north-east, about two miles, on a rock at the sea, standeth the old castle of Findlater,<sup>1</sup> ruinous.

From that to the south-west one myle, is the house of Birkenbogue, belonging to Sir James Abercromby, baronet. Below which, to the east, is some planting inclosed, belonging to the Earle of Findlater, called Bogue-park. About half a mile from which, to the north-east, is a sea towne, called Sand-end, belonging to the Earle of Findlater; and one myle east from that, is a house called Red-haven, belonging to the said Earle, on the sea.

To the north-east from that, one myle, is a sea port and burgh of barony, called Portsoy,<sup>2</sup> belonging to the said Earle, with a safe harbour and bullwork, where there are severall good houses; and to the south-east, hard by the toune, is an old chappel, where now is a large meeting-house lately builded. Near to which is a dwelling, called Aird; and half a myle from it to the south-west, is the house of Durn, belonging to Sir James Dunbar, baronet, near to a hill call'd Hill of Durn.

<sup>1</sup> [“The old Castle of Findlater stands on a peninsulated rock on the sea-shore; and still evidences that it had been a place of considerable importance. Leslie, Bishop of Ross, describes it as ‘castrum, loci natura ita munitum, ut inexpugnabile videatur.’ Its outer, or north wall, is so built as to correspond with the face of the rock; and its windows, which appear to have been chiefly on that side, would thus look into the sea. The lower apartments, some of which are partly excavated out of the solid rock, are strongly vaulted with stone arches; and the south side of the building, which was the only one exposed to danger, appears to have consisted of a large mass of dead wall, protected by a fosse and drawbridge. Beyond this, and at about the distance of a hundred yards, there had been another fosse and rampart, as an outwork to defend the castle.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii., pp. 186, 187.)]

<sup>2</sup> [“Portsoy was erected into a burgh of barony by a charter granted by Queen Mary in the year 1550.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii., p. 191.) The charter bears to be granted “pro poletia et edificatione habenda in villa de Portsoy / pertinente hereditarie Waltero Ogiluy de Boyne militi / jacente prope mare [in thanatu de Boyne] infra vicecomitatum nostrum de Banff · ob receptionem et hospitationem liegiorum nostrorum ad dictam villam siue per mare siue per terram venientium / ac pro communi vtilitate decore et poletia regni nostri · necnon pro bono fideli et gratuito seruicio nobis per dictum Walterum impenso”; and it confers the usual privileges “cum potestate insuper burgensisibus et inhabitantibus dicti burgi in eodem pro perpetuo crucem foralem / et forum singulis hebdomadibus die Mercurii / cum liberis nundinis annuatim die Sancti Michaelis Archangeli et per octauas eiusdem / habendi et tenendi”. (Municipal Corporations. (Scotland.) Local Reports from the commissioners, part iii., p. 144. Lond. 1836. fol. Presented to both houses of parliament by command of His Majesty.)]

And from The Hill of Durn<sup>1</sup> to the north-east, is a dwelling house called Airnbath, formerly belonging to the name of Hay, now to the Earle of Findlater. Betwixt Hill of Durn and Arnbath, is a moss now exhausted.

From Portsoy to The Burn of Boyne, to the east, is one mile; which burn (wherein there is plenty of trouts and some salmond) divydeth the parish of Fordyce from Boyndy. The parish of Fordyce, from that burn at the sea unto the head thereof at Knockhill, will measure four long myles south and by west. The parish thence goeth about one mile south-west to a house called Tillienauft, belonging formerly to the name of Barclay, now to Dunbar, holding of the Earle of Findlater, having The Burn of Boyne about one furlong to the south.

One myle from Tillienauft, south-west, ther's a house called Brackenhills, belonging in old to the name of Abercromby, and now to Sir James Gordone of Park, holden feu of the Earle of Findlater. From that, south-west two myles, is a house called Muireaik, belonging to the name of Gordone, holden few of the said Earle, within a myle of Knockhill south west.

The parish goeth from that two myles to the borders of the parish of Desford; and betwixt the two parishes, are great mosses, and the whole parish has plenty of lymestone. North west from Muiraik, there is a moss and barren muir; and, from that to the north-east, ther's another moss near exhausted.

From it, north west, is a house called Badinteulle, belonging to Glassah, about one myle from Fordyce, to the north.

The church is six myles north-west from Banff, and two myles south-east from Cullen.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> [“There is a triple fosse and rampart on the sides and top of The Hill of Durn, which seem to have quite surrounded it. The highest, which includes the large plain on the top of the hill, seems to have been strong, with a stone rampart or wall, especially at the entry or most accessible part, where it joins The Hill of Fordice. It commands an extensive view of the adjacent country; and probably was used as a retreat for the people, their families, and cattle.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. iii., p. 56.) <sup>2</sup> [“Flint arrow-heads, called by the people elf arrow-heads, have been found in this parish. There are the remains of some Druidical temples, likewise barrows or tumuli. Three of the last have been opened within these few years. One very large, between Glassaugh and the sea, immediately above the bay of Sandend, consisted of a great circular accumulation of stones, fourteen feet high, and sixty feet broad, covered with earth or turf. Upon breaking in at the top, there were found a stone coffin of flag or flat stones, and in it the bones of a person lying in their natural order, and a deer’s horn. The stones, of which sort there were few in the neighbourhood, seem principally to have been brought from the sea. This barrow is now the site of a windmill. There had been another comparatively very small barrow at about a hundred yards distance from the largest. Another barrow was Another tumulus was broken up on the contiguous farm of Brankamentum, where there was found an urn containing ashes : it was very hard and the clay well baked." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. iii., pp. 56, 57.) "A tumulus was opened at Auchmore, in the year 1828, in which was found an earthen urn containing ashes. The urn was placed in a kind of rude coffin, formed of stones. Within a mile of the same place, on the brae of Roseacre, in the immediate vicinity of Portsoy, no fewer than five urns have been found, containing ashes and bones. In the year 1841, there was turned up by the plough, on the farm of Ley, another urn, containing some remains of a similar kind." (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii., p. 186.)]

A DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF DESKFOORD. BY MR. WILLIAM OGILVY.
(A.D. M.DCC.XXIV.)<sup>2</sup>

HE church of Deskfoord is situate about the midle of the parish, where stands the mansion house of Deskfoord, belonging to the Earle of Findlater; the church and house built together,<sup>3</sup> (in old said to be a litle convent), standing on a burn, which, at Cullen, is called The Burn of Cullen, but here, The Burn of Deskford.

It hath the church of Cullen to the east, two myles; to the west, the church of Ruthven, three myles; to the south, the church of Grange, four miles; and, to the east, the church of Fordyce.

The Burn of Deskford runneth down the midle of the parish, which is well

“The parish of Deskford was originally a part of the parish of Fordyce, and was included in Cullen when that parish was disjoined from Fordyce; but the precise period when Deskford was erected into a separate parish from Cullen, is not distinctly known. It appears from a decree of stipend for Fordyce, that the union subsisted in the year 1618.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. iv., pp. 358, 359. Edinb. 1792.)]

<sup>3</sup> [“There is no date upon the church: one pew in it bears 1627, another 1630. Close by it is an old castle, called The Tower of Deskford, said to have been built by the Sinclairs, who were the immediate predecessors of the Ogilvies in the property of the lordship of Deskford. It appears to have been a pretty spacious building, in the form of a court; but there now remains only one room’s length, vaulted below, with three storeys and a garret. Adjoining to this tower there was formerly a chapel, called St. John’s Chapel, upon one of the walls of which there is an inscription, bearing the name of Alexander Ogilvie, with the Ogilvie’s arms and motto, and the date of 1551. In an orchard adjoining, there is an ash-tree which measures in girth twenty-four feet five inches and a half: it is called St. John’s Tree.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. iv., pp. 361, 362.)]

“The church is a very ancient building, and was evidently erected before the reformation. It is said to have been dedicated to St. John. Beside it, is St. John’s Well, the spring or stream supplying which issues almost as it were from beneath the church. Close to St. John’s Well is the once stately tree dedicated to the same saint, of which nothing now remains but a very small part of the trunk, hollowed, scathed, and withered, sending forth only one small solitary green branch. Close to the church is the ruin of an old castle, called The Tower of Deskford. The south wall of this building and the north wall of the planted, and hath plenty of lymestone. There are great mosses on both sides of the parish.

About one myle from the church, to the north-east, is a dwelling house, call'd Airdoch, belonging to a vassel to the Earle of Findlater, of the name of Ogilvie.

South from the church one myle, on the said burn of Deskfoord, is a house called Skeith,<sup>1</sup> belonging in old to the name of Abererumby, now to the Earle of Findlater.

The church is eight myles north-north-west from Banf, and two myles south from Cullen.<sup>2</sup> church are in immediate contact, and there is reason to think, that there had been a door of communication between the two, and that the church had been the family chapel. The Tower was, till lately, a very prominent and interesting feature in the scenery ; but, owing to the masonry having got into so loose and incohesive a state, as to occasion danger of its being blown down, and overwhelming the church, which it greatly overtopped, it was some years ago pulled down." (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xi., pp. 65, 66, 68. Edinb. 1836.)]

<sup>1</sup> [“ About a mile to the south of the church, stands the castle of Skeith, of late years become ruinous. It is delightfully situated upon an eminence rising from the burn, having a peep of the sea, and an extensive view of the strath. On each side are waterfalls from the hill, descending between rocks and fertile fields, beautifully interspersed with natural wood. This ruin is a striking object.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. iv., p. 362.) “ Of the Castle of Skeith, mentioned in the former Statistical Account, there is now no vestige.” (The New Statistical Account, number xi., p. 68.)]

<sup>2</sup> [“ On the farm of Inalterie, there are the remains of a very old strong massive building, in one part of which is a deep circular hole, about the diameter of an ordinary draw-well, inclosed by a wall of masonry, rising to a considerable height in the building. Close to it, there is a vault. In the immediate vicinity of this ruin, there was, till lately, a conical artificial eminence, called The Law Hillock, supposed to have been at one time the seat from which justice was distributed : it is now demolished. On the other side of the burn of Deskford, within view of the former, and about half a mile from it, is another hillock, rising to the height of twenty feet, with regularly sloping sides, and flat upon the top, which is of an elliptical shape, about thirty feet by eighteen feet. It is surrounded at the base by a ditch, one part of which forms the bed of a small stream which runs past it, and is called The Ha' Burn, as the hillock is called The Ha' Hillock. There was found, about twenty years ago, on the confines of a farm called Liechestown, the resemblance of a swine's head in brass, of the ordinary size, with a wooden tongue moveable by springs. It was found at a depth of about six feet, in a mossy and knolly piece of ground, upon a bed of clay.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xi., pp. 66, 67, 68.) ]

A DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF ORDEQUHILL. BY MR. WILLIAM OGILVY.
A.D. M.DCC.XXIV.<sup>2</sup>

RDEQUHILL parish, (in old, about the time of the reformation, ane part of Fordyce parish,) in the shire of Banff, hath to the north-west, the parish of Fordyce ; to the south, Abirchirder, or St. Marnoch parish ; to the east, the parishes of Banff and Boyndy ; and to the west, the parish of Grange, from which it is divided by The Knockhill of Stryla, or Strathila.

The church stands half a myle from The Burn of Boyne, (there called The Burn of Corncairn,) and is six miles distant from the toun of Banf, to the west.

The House of Park, the mansion house of Sir James Gordone of Park, baronet, stands about one myle east of the church ; five miles, south-west of Banf ; and four, south of Cullen.

At a midle distance betwixt the church and the House of Park stands New Park, or Newton of Park, erected into a burgh of barony, in a charter granted to Sir Adam Gordon of Park by King James the Sixth, anno M.DC.XVII., with the privilege of a weekly mercat, and seven yearly fairs.

The church was of old but a chappel, dedicated to the Virgin Mary,<sup>3</sup> in the fowr hundreth and twenty yher in to the kyrke yharde of the chanounry off Rosmarkyng Willyame the Grame the sone and the hayr vñquhil of Henry the Grame" resigned his lands of the barony of Kerdale, in the sheriffdom of Inverness, in the hands of " a nobil lorde and a mighty Thomas Erle of Mureff his ovyr lorde." <sup>3</sup> [" The parish of Ordiqhull was formerly a chapelry in the parish of Fordyce, where public worship was performed once a month, and seems to have been erected into a separate parish about the year 1622. The church was built about the same time, on the spot where then stood St. Mary's chapel. A well in the parish, dedicated to the Virgin Mary,

The said whole parish doth now belong to the Gordons of Park, who now represent these of Cairnburrow in Glass. Park was built, anno M.D.XXIX., by a lady dowager of the Lord Salton Abernethy, who was herself a daughter of Stuart, Earle of Buchan.

was formerly, at certain seasons, much resorted to by the superstitious as well as by the sick." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. vi., pp. 348, 349. Edinb. 1793.)

The general assembly of the church of Scotland, which met at Linlithgow in July, 1608, recommended that, "for remedieing the growth of papistrie," "order be taken with the Pilgrimages, videlicet, The Chappell callit Ordiqhull, and The Chappell of Grace, and to ane well in the bounds of Enzie." (The Booke of the Universall Kirke of Scotland, p. 581. Mr. Peterkin's edit. Edinb. 1839. 8vo.) In July, 1607, one of the parishioners of Rothiemay was accused, before the kirk session, "for passing in pilgrimage to Ordequhill." (Gordon's History of Scots Affairs from M.DC.XXXVI. to M.DC.XLI., vol. i., append. to pref., p. [lii.]) The Chapel of Grace stood on the western bank of the Spey, in the parish of Dundurcus. "The Chappelle of Our Ladye of Grace, in Murray land," writes Father Blackall, "two milles from the Bogge of Gight, had bein of old a very devote place; and many pillgrimages had bein made to it from al the partes in the northe of Scotland; but then ther was nothing standing of it but some brocken walles, which the minister made throw downe within the chappelle, to hinder the people to pray there: a great devotion of their holy Covenant, rebellious both to God and their King! The Ladye Aboyne used to make that pillgrimage every year, so long as she had health to do it; a mater of threttie milles from her owne house, wherof she made two of them afoot, and barefooted, next to the chappell." (Extracts from the Presbytery Book of Strathbogie, pref., p. xv., note. Aberd. 1843.) Pilgrims flocked to the ruined shrine even so lately as the end of the last century. Mr. Lachlan Shaw, writing in the year 1775, says, "in the north end of the parish [of Dundurcus] stood the Chapel of Grace, and near to it the Well of that name, to which multitudes, even from the Western Isles, do still resort, and nothing short of violence can restrain their superstition." (History of the Province of Murray, p. 326. Edinb. 1775. 4to.)

"The only person of eminence in literature whom the parish of Ordiqhull has produced, is Mr. Walter Goodall, author of a defence of Mary Queen of Scots." (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xi., p. 81. Edinb. 1836; The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. vi., p. 352.) "Walter Goodal was the eldest son of John Goodal, a farmer, at Acres of Culfin, by Margaret Taylor, the sister of James Taylor, who was parochial schoolmaster, in Ordipul. In this parish, Walter was born, about the year 1706. He died on the twenty-eighth of July, 1766." (George Chalmers' Life of Thomas Ruddiman, pp. 127—132. Lond. 1794. 8vo.)]

THE PARISHES OF BANFF AND INVERBOYNDIE, (OR BOYNDIE.)<sup>1</sup>

A DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF BANFF. BY MR. WILLIAM OGILVY.

A.D. M.DCC.XXIV.<sup>2</sup>

HE parish of Banff hath the parish of Boyndy to the west; the parish of Alva to the south-south-east; the parish of King Edward to the south-east; and the parish of Gemrie to the east.

“The parishes of Banff and Inverboindie continued united till the year 1634, when Mr. Alexander Seton, then minister of Banff, brought an action of valuation and modification of the teinds against the heritors, by which the union was declared void, and each holden to be a separate parish.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xx., p. 333. Edinb. 1798.) “The boundaries of the two parishes are thus fixed in the decree of disjunction, 1635: ‘The said parochine of Banff to have includit thairintill the toun of Banff, with the pendicles of the samyn, as it had of before; and to have adjoyned thairto, out of the said parochine of Inverboindie, the landis of Ord, Inchdrower, with the pendicles thairof; the lands of Blairshinnoch, Kilbeuchlie, Paddocklaw, and Cullinortis; the whilk haill landis and parochine lyes on the eist side of the burne of Inverboindie: And the said parochine of Inverboindie to have includit thairin, as the particular boundis of the parochine of the samyn, the haill landis lyand betwixt the burne of Boyne at the west, the burne of Inverboindie at the east, the sea on the north, and the landis of Park of Corn-

<sup>1</sup> [" It appears that the old kirk of Banff, (which was taken down in the year 1797,) was rebuilt by the town-council in the year 1471, when Sir James Ogilvie of Deskford was provost. They endowed a chaplain, with ten merks of stipend, besides a living out of the common fund. Of this edifice there now remains nothing, excepting an ancient vaulted aisle, on the south side, now a burying place of Lord Banff's family. In this aisle is a monument, with the following inscription : ' ANNO DOMINI . 1558 . 29 . NOVEMBRIS . OBIIT . VALTERVS . OGILVY . DE . DVNLVGVS . MILES . PREPOSITVS . HVJVS . VRBIS . ET . HIC . <sup>1</sup> [“ Part of the ancient wall of the Castle of Banff is yet entire, and the remains of the moat and intrenchments are still visible. Near to the Castle was situated the chaplainry of the Holy Rood. At what period, or by what founder, this chapel was erected, no information can be derived, either from tradition or ancient record. Dr. James Sharp, Archbishop of Saint Andrews, and Primate of Scotland, whose tragical end exhibits a melancholy instance of the furious and misguided zeal of ancient times, was born in the month of May, 1613, in the Castle of Banff. He was the son of Mr. Sharp, sheriff-clerk of Banffshire: his mother was a daughter of the laird of Kininvy. He died with the intrepidity of a hero, and the piety of a Christian, praying for the assassins with his latest breath.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xx., pp. 343, 371, 372, 375.) “ The house where Archbishop Sharp was born, was pulled down about the year 1816. One or two pieces of lettered freestone, taken from it, have been built into the churchyard wall, at the burial ground of the Sharp family.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xi., p. 30.)

In a roll of missing charters by King Robert III. is “ Carta to Alexander Keith of Grandoun, of the keeping of the castle of Banff, in vicecomitatu de Banff.” (Robertson’s Index to the Charters, p. 141.)]

<sup>2</sup> [“ About the tyme that the Assembly ended in Aberdeene [August, 1640.], Monro listid his leagwer, and, leaving Strabogye, marches for Banfe, August tenth, a sea towne about thirteen myles distant from Straboggye, north-easte. The reasone of his going ther was to tacke cowrse with Sir George Ogilvy, (at that tyme called laird of Banfe, though shortly afterward created Lord by the King.) Banfe had been active against the Covenanters, anno 1639; and all this yeare, 1640, had made his residence at cowrt with the King, as some other northerne gentlemen and noblemen did, such as the Lord Ogilvy, Walter Urqhward of Cromby, William Seaton of Shythinn, Sir Gilbert Menezes of Pittfodells, etcet. The cittizens of Banfe, for the most pairt, wer Covenanters; and, albeit in former tymes they depended much upon Banses familie, who dwelt ordinarye in their towne, yet now they wer so farr estranged from him, that they were growne his enemyes. The cheif ringleader and agent amongst them for the Covenant was one Dr. Alexander Douglasse, a mediciner, who was gott into such credite with his townsmen and with the Covenanters, that in the following yeares he came to be provost of Banfe, ofstner then any man ther; as also high sheriff of the shyre of Banfe, and alwayes either a member of parliaments and comittyes of state, bearing great sway in thes places for severall yeares afterward: which preferrments, (being a wytte man,) he improved much to the inriching of himselfe, and, for the most part, (considderinge the tymes,) to the good lycking of all the shyre, except some particular enemyes, who either envyd his rysing or mislycked his wayes, which wer ambigously spockne of: or because ther was hatred tuixt him and them, for ill offices done to them, and extortione under colour of justice. This man was thought a maine instrument in bringing Monroe to Banfe, who no sooner came thither, but he sett downe his qwarter in the laird of Banfe his beautifull garden, which was a great ornament to the towne of Banfe, and, being gallantly planted and walled, overshadowd and enclosd the east syde of that towne. The souldiours were no sooner sett downe there, but they fell to macke havocke of all the fruct trees and other trees which grew there in great abundance; leaving not so much as one standing tree, younge nor old, and cutting upp all the hedges to the rootes; in which deformed condition it is yet to be seen as they left it. Adjacent to that garden, in the very heart of that towne, stood Banfes pallace, high built and qwarterly; the strucuture magnificent, with two base cowrts; and few houses in thes places of Scotland comparable to it. Upon it the souldiours fell next, and, in few dayes, defaced it; leaving neither any covering, glasse, timber, nor iron worke ther; breacking downe the hewed worke, doors, windows, and knocking out the iron barrs of the windows; leaving nothing to be seen but defaced walls, which yet speake its beautye, as it now standes, lycke ane old rouinouse abbey. In this industriouse defacing of so brave a pallace, the souldiours wer helped by the rascalitye of the cittizens and countrey people neerest adjacent, who either bought, stole, or embeasled the materials thereof. It is reported, that when it was told to the Kinge, he said, That for the house it matterd not muche, since expences could sett upp as good ane house againe in short tyme; but, he said, that it was a crwell thing to fall upon the garden, the losse wheroft could not in many yeares be repaired, and so much the worse, because it neither had done evill, nor could hurt them; besyde, that it was ane ornament to the toune and countrey. For to sett upp this losse, King Charles in anno 1641, gave to Sir George Ogilvy of Banfe ten thousand merkes Scottish in gold, which Banfe brought home with him; yet too little for to repair his losses; but the King could not do better to him at that tyme. And not only was the pallace defaced, but lyckewayes much houshold stuff and spare furniture, which had belonged to Banfe his predecessors, was seised upon and embezled, together with a considerable librarye of bookees which wer ther. After they had defaced his pallace in Banfe, a party is directed to a countrey dwelling of his called Inshdrure, lying two miles south-west from Banfe; and it was rifed lyckewayes, August eighteenth, but not so ill handled as his townees dwellinge. Thereafter they goe to another countrey house of his, called Forglen; which is about five myles distant from Banfe, south-west, and stands in sight of Turreff, within a myle therof, upon the water of Doverne; and they search it lyckewayes and rifle it, but to lesse pourpose than the rest; for Banfes servaunts, perceiving how the rest of his dwellings wer used, came in the night tyme, and either did lay upp in secrett places, or carrye away such houshold stuffe as was

In the midle of the town is an Hospital,<sup>1</sup> the Tolbooth, and the Cross, and several good houses in the toune. From which, to the west-south-west, is a house, (one myle from Banff,) called Colleonard, belonging to one called Joss, seated near a large muir, to the north-east, wherein are two lochs without fish. Below which, to the south-east, is a dwelling called Backlay, now belonging to Braico, near Diveran, to the east and south.

From that, one myle south, is a dwelling-house called Inchdruer,<sup>2</sup> belonging to Lord Banff: above which, to the south, are great mosses and muires.

of most value. All his victwall that could be founde was tackne out of his girmells and givne to the souldours for to maintaine them, (as at Strabogye,) who mostly sold it at ane under worthe to the poor countrey people about. The reason why his pallace of Banfe was defaced seems to have been the jealousy of the cittizens of Banfe, who supposed that sometyme it might be made use of as a cittadel to overawe their citty: yet such as yet sees it, and understandes the form of cittadells, know that could not be the true reasone; for it was built for beauty, not for strenth, and not for defence, lett bee offence; for it is scituated low, and overlooked by the castell and a great paire of the towne of Banfe, which hanges above it upon the side of a swellinge grounde and hille. All the wonder heir is, that, using Banfes house so ill, they should have spared the earle of Airlyes lodging, which is distant and separate from Banfes house only by the lenthe of the formentioned garden interjected betuixt the two houses; for which clemency I can give no reason, but possiblly because Argylle was not ther at that tyme." <sup>2</sup> [“The House or Castle of Boyn, on the Boyn water, near its junction with the sea, is still standing, and, as a ruin, is tolerably entire. It was dilapidated about or soon after the middle of the last century, when the roof was removed, and the hewn stones used for buildings in the parish. It exhibits the remains of considerable beauty and magnificence: in front may be traced a double row of gardens and terraces, with flights of stairs. The ruins of a more ancient residence and place of strength, are still to be observed, situated on the west side of the burn, on a precipitous rock by the brink of the sea, below the mansion, to which it had given place.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii., pp. 228, 229.)]

From the burn mouth, the parish goeth three myles south and by west. At the House of Boyne, is a publick house, called Scots Miln of Boyne. There's a bridge on the said burn of one arch.

Two myles from that, is a dwelling place belonging in old to the name of Ogilvy, now to the Earle of Findlater, call'd Bankhead : the old house is demolished.

A quarter of a myle from The Burn of Boyne to the west, and from that to the south-west a lyke distance from the burn, is a house called Culphin, formerly depending on the laird of Boyne, now belonging to the Earle of Findlater: but it is now demolished. Above that are great mosses, and a large moor, to the east ; the mosses, south and west. From which, half a mile, is a dwelling-house, called Blairmad, belonging in old to the name of Gordone, (the house now demolished,) and now to the Earle of Findlater.

Bordering with that land, half a mile, is a dwelling-house, and small baronie, belonging now to Rothemay, called Baldavie<sup>1</sup> before and now, of the name of Ogilvy, standing on The Burn of Boyndy, south-east. South-west from that, is a dwelling-house, belonging to the name of Stewart, call'd Ordnies,<sup>2</sup> hard by the house of Baldavy. Ordnies depends on the Earle of Findlater now, formerly belonging to the laird of Boyne.

From that to the north-east, is a dwelling place called Cairntowne, belonging lately to the name of Hacket, now to the Earle of Findlater. North-east, one myle from Ordnies, south from Cairntoune, is, to the east-south-east, a barren muir, wherein is an old moss, one myle from a dwelling called Reatie, long since belonging to the name of Dun, now to the Earle of Findlater, standing near The Burn of Boyndy, to the south-east. From that is a barren muir, one myle, called Dallachy, belonging to the Earle of Findlater. There is a great deal of lyme-stone in that land, and in most places in the parish of Boyndy.

Below Dallachie, to the south-east one furlong, is a little loch without fish ; and from that, half a myle north-east, is a barren muir, wherein are two lochs without fish.

<sup>1</sup> [On the ninth of March, 1491, there was an “ accioune and cause persewit befoir the lordis of consale be Walter Ogilby of Bone aganis Andro Innes in Baldavy ffor the wrangwis occupacioun lawborin and manurin of the landis of Baldavy witht the pertinentis and for the wrangwis vptakin and withholdin of the profitis and dewiteis of the sammyn of twa yeris bigain.” (Acta Dominorum Concilii, p. 175.)]

In the midle of the parishes of Boyndy and Fordyce, there's the marks of an old stone dyke, divyding The Boyne in Thaindome, so called, (lying towards the sea to the north and east), and The Forest of Boyne, (lying south and west). The Thaindome belonged of old to the lairds of Boyne : The Forest, to an old family of the name of Hay, lord Forest of Boyne, now extinct. The heiress of which family, long since, was married to Huntly; by which marriage the Earle of Huntly got The Forest of Boyne, as yet holding of Huntly, and the lands of Einzie in Banffshire, bordering with the Earle of Findlater, with the house lately called Bogue of Geith, now Gordone Castle. That estate, which came to Huntly by the marriage above named, yields about fourty thousand merks yearly. Gordone Castle is eight myles west from Cullen ; and Cullen is from Banf to the north-east eight myles, keeping the King's highway.

<sup>1</sup> [“ To the west of the old church, on the rocky eminences on the north side of the road, two circular encampments may still be traced. Immediately below the upper one, on the southern declivity, stands a large perpendicular stone, surrounded by a causeway. A little beyond this, on the opposite side of the road, not far from the site of the old mansion house of Buchragie, may be traced the huge remains of what may have been a camp. A short Roman sword was found in the bogs of Reattie. In the immediate neighbourhood of the manse offices, on the west side, a stone coffin was found a number of years ago. Three Druidical circles are in the parish : one, near the parish church ; another, within a mile to the north-east ; and a third, on the farm of Bankhead. Near the north-east corner of the wood of Whyntie is an artificial mound, known by the name of The Gallows Cairn. On the farm of Dallachy, below the old road, five or six urns, containing the remains of bones, were found a few years ago. They were of rude construction, except one, which is said to have been well shaped, ornamented with diagonal lines crossing each other, and surmounted by a lid and handle. The adjoining houses were built on a reputed Elf hillock. Another similar urn was found a few years ago at the base of a small circular mound, at the lower extremity of the plantation extending from Craig-herbs to the turnpike road.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii., pp. 225, 226.)

“ The parish had the honour of giving birth to Thomas Ruddiman, the eminent Latin grammarian. Here also was born a personage whose fame is of a different character, Mrs. Buchan, the founder of a religious sect in the west of Scotland.” (Ibid.)

“ The county of Banff, and the parish of Boyndie, have the credit of Ruddiman's birth. In October, 1674, he was born on the farm of Raggel, in the barony of Baldavy. Margaret Simpson, his mother, was the daughter of Andrew Simpson, who occupied the farm of Little Ratie in the same parish. His father was James Ruddiman, who was born in the parish of Alva, but removed to the farm of Raggel, which was the property of Mr. Ogilvy of Baldavy. James Ruddiman was long remembered for his agricultural knowledge, as a farmer, and for his seasonable charity, as a neighbour. When he heard of the demise of

On the twelfth of February, in the year 1226, King Alexander II. confirmed to the monks of Kinlos, in Murray, the grant which his father King William had made to them of a toft in each of his burghs of Nairn, Aberdeen, Banff, Berwick, Stirling, Perth, and Montrose: "Et preterea unum tostum in Eren . unum in Aberdon . unum in Banef . unum in Berewych . unum in Strivelin . unum in Perth . unum in Munros . ita ut homines eorum super ipsa tosta manentes liberi sint et quieti ab omnibus auxilijs servicijs consuetudinibus et exactionibus secularibus ad nos pertinentibus per servicium quod eis facere debent." (J.L. pp. 457—459.)

"King Robert I. confirmed the privileges of Banff as a burgh; but the earliest charter which was exhibited to the commissioner, or is believed to be extant, is one granted by King Robert II., dated the seventh of October, 1372. By it there are granted 'totum burgum nostrum de Banff cum pertinentibus, per omnes rectas metas et diuisas suas cum terra prepositure dicti burgi que vocatur Cathnelpy, cum croijs et piscarijis aque de Duverne, molendinis multuris et eorum sequelis,' etc. The governing charter is one granted by King James VI. dated the ninth of May, 1581." DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF CULLEN OF BOYNE. BY MR. WILLIAM OGILVY.
A.D. M.DCC.XXIV.<sup>2</sup>

ULLEN, in the shyre of Banff, is a royall burgh,<sup>3</sup> whereof the Earle of Eindlater is heretale constable. It hath to the north-west, the church of Rathven, two myles; to the south-west, the church of Deskfoord, two myles; to the east, the church of Fordyce, two myles.

The toune is above half a myle in length, and hath only one street, which beginneth at the south end, where there is a house called Burdsbank, lately belonging to the name of

King William the Lion, between the years 1189 and 1198, granted to Richard, bishop of Murray, a toft in the burgh of Inverculan. (Registrum Episcopatus Moraviensis, p. 11, above, pp. 128, 129.)

On the fiftieth of October, 1232, King Alexander II. granted to Andrew bishop of Murray the land of the provostry of Kynmyly, by a charter dated " Apud Inuerculan . v . die Octobris anno regni nostri octavo decimo . <sup>1</sup> [“The Earl of Findlater had a bede-house in the town of Cullen, which accommodated eight poor men, who had peats allowed them for fuel, and each had six and a half bolls of meal yearly. The bede-house being ruinous, was lately taken down; but the Earl allows a house free of rent, and the fuel, to such of the bede-men as incline to possess it, but few of them seem inclined to do it; but the meal is regularly given to poor persons, and sometimes divided between two poor families, which makes it more extensively useful.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xii., p. 148. Edinb. 1794.) See also the New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii. pp. 351, 352.]

<sup>2</sup> [“Near to Cullen House, there is the vestige of a house, in which it is said Queen Elizabeth, the queen of King Robert Bruce, died. This tradition seems to be confirmed by the charter of the town of Cullen, from which it appears that that King granted and gave in gift for ever five pounds yearly for the support of a chaplain in the church of Saint Mary of Cullen, to pray for the soul of his queen, Elizabeth. There is a farther tradition that Queen Elizabeth's bowels are buried in Our Lady Kirk of Cullen.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xii., pp. 153, 154.) See Collections for a History of the Shires of Aberdeen and Banff, p. 210. Fordun seems to be the only chronicler who has recorded the death of the second consort of King Robert I. His words are: “Anno Domini m.ccc.xxvii. septimo Kalendas Novembris, obiit domina Elizabeth regina, mater Regis David, et sepulta est in choro de Dunfermeling, juxta Regem Robertum sponsum suum.” (Scotichronicon, lib. xiii., c. xii.; vol. ii. p. 288.).]

<sup>3</sup> [“At the north end of the town of Cullen, there is a beautiful green hill, called The Castle-hill, hanging over the sea, which, before the use of cannon, was extremely well situated for a place of strength, being inaccessible from the north by an almost perpendicular high rock, and having a deep ditch in all other directions for its defence.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xii., p. 153.) “On the eastern bank of the water of Cullen, and overhanging the sea-town, an eminence called The Castle-hill, rises in a conical form to the height of upwards of two hundred feet above the level of the sea. Traces of fortifications on it are yet distinctly visible.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii., p. 325.)]

All the parish is within the town, except some few tenents houses, about half a mile south from the toune, and some land one myle east, called Seafield.<sup>1</sup>

Cullen is eight myles north-west from Banff.

“ On the moor of Rannachy, at the distance of a hundred paces from the road, is an eminence evidently artificial, called Tarrielerack. On the heights of Corridown, there was a remarkable Druidical temple called The Core Stanes ; the stones of which were employed in building the new house of Letterfourie. There is a large heap of stones on an eminence in one of Lord Findlater's enclosures, near Woodside, southward of the public road, commonly called The King's Cairn. On the moor between Findochtie and the plantation of The Bauds, a great number of small cairns are distinguishable. About thirty years ago, a countryman discovered in a tumulus or cairn, on the farm of Westerside, at no great distance from the house of Rannes, a stone coffin containing human bones. Another was discovered, four or five years ago, a few feet to the northward, in the same tumulus. The ruins of an old chapel, near the house of Farskane ; of the house of Findochtie ; and of some buildings on the tops of two hills, on the east and west side of the harbour of Port-knockie, the former called The Green Castle, and the latter The Tronach Castle, are still to be seen. Tarwathie was, in former times, the watch-word for convening The Enzie men, in times of danger, or at markets, and other places of public resort, when any of them happened to be engaged in a fray. There are two annual fairs in the parish, both named Peter-Fair.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xiii. pp. 407, 421, 422, 423, 426. Edinb. 1794.)

THE PARISH OF HUNTLY; OR THE UNITED PARISHES OF DUNBENNAN AND KYNOR.

DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISHES OF DUMBENNAN AND KINORE.<sup>1</sup>
(circa A.D. M.DCC.XXVI.)

N the parish of Dumbennan is the Castle of Strathbogy,<sup>2</sup> pleasantly situated where Bogy falls into Deveron, which has here a stone bridge.

Strathbogy was of old divided into forty-eight davachs, each containing as much as four ploughs (each having four or five yoke of oxen) could till in a year. But now, the wood being cut down, the arable land is more than double.

The church of Kinore was dedicated to Saint Mungo, and

“ Huntly is the modern name of the parish, which consisted formerly of two distinct parishes, both served by one parson. The name of the one was Dumbennan; of the other Kinore: they were united by a decree of the lords of session and plantation of kirks, and called the parish of Huntly, and a place of worship erected central to both in the year 1727.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xi., pp. 467, 468. Edinb. 1794.)]

<sup>2</sup> [“ Near the town are the ruins of Huntly Castle. On the avenue that leads to it are two large square towers, which had defended the gateway. Great part of the castle seems to be very old, and is nearly demolished; but there is a massy building of a more modern date, in which some of the apartments, and, in particular, their curious ceilings, are still preserved pretty entire. They are painted with a great variety of subjects, in small divi-here is Saint Mungo's [hill, with Saint Mungo's well.]<sup>1</sup> This Saint is said to have been the son of Eugene III., King of Scotland, and of Saint Thenaw, daughter to Loth, King of Picts; and to have been bred under Saint Serf, then abbot of the Culdees at Culross. The Aberdeen Breviary says his father was Eugenius Ewfren', King of Cumberland. He had the misfortune to be born in fornication; but, long after, out of reverence to him, it began to be reported that his mother was not unmarried only, but also a virgin. The Aberdeen Breviary says that his grandfather, King Loth, commanded his mother and her child to be drowned, and so put them into an old leaky boat, which, however, having set sail from Lothian, arrived safe at Culross, where a chappel to Saint Mungo was afterward built. After this, it seems, his mother led such a penitent and exemplary life sions: a few lines of poetry underneath each describe the subject of the piece. In the chamber which was appointed for a chapel, the parables and other sacred subjects are represented in the same style." (Antiquities and Scenery of the North of Scotland, in a series of letters to Thomas Pennant, esqr., by the reverend Charles Cordiner, minister of St. Andrew's chapel, Bamff, pp. 9, 10. Lond. 1780. 4to.)

"Nigh to the bridge of Doveron stand the remains of Huntly Castle, which still afford a striking proof of the grandeur and hospitality of that ancient family, though one part only of the original plan seems to have been completed. On the north front are the arms of the family, cut in stone, with the names of the builder, George Gordon, first Marquis of Huntly, and Henrietta Stuart, first Marchioness of Huntly, and the date 1602. A spacious turnpike stair leads to what has been a very grand hall, and still bears the marks of splendour and magnificence. Its length is about forty-three feet; its breadth, twenty-nine; and its height, sixteen. There is another grand apartment immediately over this, thirty-seven feet in length, and twenty-nine in breadth. The chimneys of both are highly ornamented with curious sculpture of various figures, which, considering the inattention paid to this once magnificent fabric, are still in a tolerable state of preservation, and must attract the observation of any one who has a taste for ancient sculpture. The thickness of the wall admits of several small closets; and, in the upper apartments, there are large bow windows, a little projected from the surface of the wall, fronting the south. Indeed, most of the apartments are still in tolerable preservation, particularly the ceilings, which are ornamented with a great variety of paintings in small divisions, containing many emblematical figures, with verses, expressive of some moral sentiment, in doggerel rhyme. On the avenue which leads to the castle, there are two square towers, which had defended the gateway, and which the writer has seen adorned with the arms of the family, cut out in stone, in the front of the wall adjoining each tower, in good repair. The hewn stone of the windows and corners has been taken out, and applied to ignoble purposes." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xi. pp. 477, 478.)]

<sup>1</sup> ["In the parish of Kinore there is a hill called St. Mungo, on the west side of which there is a spring issuing from it, called St. Mungo's Well, of no medicinal quality but what arises from superstitious credulity." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xi. p. 468.)]

that she also was registered among the Saints, her feast being held on the eighteenth of July. (King and Camerarius.)

He was given to devotion from his childhood, and after he came to be a man, being made Bishop of Glasgow at the age of twenty-five, he travelled over all the kingdom afoot, preaching the gospel everywhere, and finding no rest but in doing good : whence it is said, at this day, of a business that appears to have no end, that it is like Saint Mungo's work which was never done : for this saint travelled not only as far as Wales in A.D. 543, where he lived some time with Saint David, Bishop of Menevia (and turned away many from Pelagianism), but also in A.D. 565, joined Saint Colm, the abbot, in converting the northern Picts, and sent out some of his disciples even to Norway, to plant Christianity there. (Bale apud Goodwin de Praesulibus Angliae, in Episcopis Asaphiensibus.) In Wales, on the river Elwy, he founded a monastery of nine hundred and sixty-five monks, and a bishoprick in A.D. 560, which, from his scholar Saint Asaph, a Scotishman (who was at first abbot of Glasgow, where Saint Mungo had founded a monastery on the model of that of Culross) whom he placed first bishop there, is called Saint Asaph's to this day.

Saint Mungo dyed at the age of a hundred and eighty-five, at Glasgow, on the thirteenth of January, A.D. 603. (Breviary of Aberdeen in the Life of Saint Baldred.)

'Tis said that the Queen of Scotland, having lost a ring which the King had given her as a love token, and, being on that account, suspected of adultery by the King her husband, had recourse to Saint Mungo, who presently ordered a salmon to be taken out of Clyde, which was found to have the ring in its mouth. (Camerarius, from a manuscript in the Archbishop of Glasgow's library) : And hence it is that on the seal of the Bishops of Glasgow ther is the figure of a salmon with a ring in its mouth. The city also has for arms the same salmon and ring, with a bell, the original of which, being the same which Saint Mungo used, was kept as a relick here.

'Tis said farther, that, on a tyme, having no oxen to plow the ground, he took occasion to shew his disciples what absolute dominion man had over the creatures before the fall, and to this purpose called the deer out of the wood to do the work of oxen, whereupon they obeyed instantly ; but one of them being soon after devoured by a wolf, Saint Mungo commanded that very wolf to put himself under the yoke, who did it as soon as commanded. (Camerarius.) And hence is the name of Glasgow, which signifies a deer and a wolf.

The collect for his day used in the diocese of Saint Andrews is this: " Deus qui Beatum Kentigernum confessorem tuum atque pontificem ecclesie tue doc-torem pariter atque rectorem mirifice presignasti : presta quesumus ut ejus ve-nerandam solennitatem celebramus ipsius semper suffragia sentiamus." (Missale de Arbuthnot.)

His hymn (as in the same Missale de Arbuthnot) runs thus :

Petition to the bailie of the regality of Huntly for a toleration to the Stang.<sup>1</sup> (A.D. 1734.)

Unto the Much Honoured the Baillie of the Regality of Huntly the humble Complaint and Representation of the Under Subscribers upon Mr John Fraser Husband to Anne Johnston in Huntly Humbly Shewing

That upon the Eleventh of January Instant the Said Mr John Fraser Did under Cloud of Night Most inhumanly and Barbarously Beat and Bruise Anne Johnstoun his Said Spouse to the effusion of her Blood and great hazard and peril of her Life And not only then but it is his constant practice as can be attested by Severalls of the Neighbourhead who have divers and Sundry times risen from their Beds at Mid-night and has rescued her out of his merciless hands or she had been most miserably Butchered by him And seeing your Petitioners are informed that Said Fraser has given in ane information to your Lordshipe against some of our good Neighbours Who upon Saturday last being the twelth instant went to his house alleading they would cause him Ride the Stange (use and wont in such cases) but to our certain Knowledge with no other Design than to fright and Deter him from his villanous and cruell usage of his Said Spouse in all time comming

May it Therfore please Your Lordshipe to take this our more than most Lamentable case into your most Serious consideration by granting A toleration to the Stang which has not only ever been practicable in this place but in most pairts of this Kingdome being wee know no act of Parliament to the contrair: Or else if your Lordshipe can fall on a more prudent method wee most humbly begg your opinion for preventing more fatall consequences, Otherways upon the least disobligment given wee mus expect to fall Victims to our husbands displeasure from which Libera nos Domine

Huntry, 18th January, 1734. John Gordon of Avachy, baillie:

The Defender appearing and craving to be allowed to prove that he uses his wife civilly and in the ordinary way, the Baillie allows him till too morrow for doing the same With certification if he failed, he would not only remitt the scandalous part to be punished by the Kirk Sessione but otherwayes fine and amerciat him as he should see cause.

JOHN GORDON.

Regality Court of Huntly again mett within the tolbooth therof, upon the nineteenth day of January 1734, by John Gordon of Avachie, and other ordinary members :

Complains Mr John Fraser in Huntly, with concourse of the procurator fiscal, upon James Meldrum servant, Alexander Brown in Huntly, John Falconer and William Allan, servants to Baillie Falconer in Huntly, who yesterday, upon the eighteenth current, violently attackt the person of the said John Fraser in the face of the sun about three in the afternoon, tore his cloths and abus'd his person, by carrying him in a publick manner through the toun of Huntly upon a tree : Therfore craves they may be fined and amerciat in such sums as the baillie shall see cause, and to remain in prison till they pay the same, or find caution therefore and to the peace ; and decerned to pay five pounds sterling, in name of damages, to the private party.

Compeared the persons complained upon, and judicially confessed and acknowledged their being accessory art and part in the cryme lybelled against them ; but can't write.

The Baillie, in respect of the said confession, fines and amerciatts each of the said Defenders in twenty pounds Scots ; and decerns conjunctly for twelve pounds of assythment to the privat party, and ordains them to remain in prison till they find caution to the peace.

JOHN GORDON.

THE PARISH OF GARTLY (OR GRANTULY.)

A DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF GARTLEY.<sup>1</sup> (circa A.D. M.DCC.XXVI.)

HE church of Gartley, dedicate to Saint Andrew, has an isle wherein the house of Huntley is buried.<sup>2</sup> Here is Andersmas fair, and Saint Andrew's well, one mile from the church.

There were here three<sup>3</sup> chapels :

A chapel, at Brawlingknow ;
A chapel, near Moorale-house ;
Saint Finnans chapel and well, at Talathrewie.

DESCRIPTION OF THE PARIOCH OF GARTLIE.<sup>4</sup> (circa A.D. M.DCC.XXX.)

The parioch of Gartlie, the barony of which is in Banff-shire, and all the rest in Aberdeen-shire,<sup>5</sup> and the whole in the diocese of Murray, has upon the north,

“ Assedatioun of the teynd schevis of the paroche of Gartelie, set be the Bischop with consent of the cheptour, to Walter Barclay of Newtoun, for nynteyn yeiris : payand thair-fair 240 merkis yeirlie : Witnes, Johnne Douglas prebendar of Ruffill, Walter Barclay of Drumdelgie, David Cumyng, Johnne Inglis, servitouris to the Bischop : At Spyne and Elgin, 8 August 1580.” (Ibid.)

The church of Gartly, Garntuly, or Grantully, was one of the mensal churches of the Bishop of Murray. (Id. pp. xviii., xix.)]

<sup>2</sup> [“ The ashes of the Viscount of Aboyne and of John Gordon, laird of Rothiemay, who were burned in the old tower of the house of Frendraught in the year 1630, were buried in a vault in the church of Gartly, which is still to be seen.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xi., p. 98. Edinb. 1836.)]

<sup>3</sup> [“ The sites of four chapels are still pointed out in The Braes, namely, at Heathy-hillock, Brawlinknows, Tillythrowie, and Kirkney ; and the vestiges of some of them, and of the burial grounds thereto attached, are still visible.” (Id. p. 97.)]

Dumbennan ; upon the south, Rhynie and Kennethmont ; upon the east, Insch and Drumblate ; and upon the west, Glass.

The church stands upon the east side of Bogie, twenty-four miles north-north-west from Aberdeen ; eighteen, south-east from Elgin ; six, north-north-west from Insch ; fourteen, south from Banff ; and two, south from Huntly, the presbytery seat.

Seats. The old castle of Gartly<sup>1</sup> lies a quarter of a mile south-south-east from the church ; and Collithie, as much north-west.

Rivers. The river of Kirknie takes its rise in the head of Tillieminnit ; and, after a course of four miles east, enters Bogy upon the west side, opposite to Coldrain,<sup>2</sup> a mile and an half north from Whitelums.

Ness-Bogie arises three miles north-west, in the parish of Glass, and runs south-east into Bogy at the miln of Collithie, opposite to the church.

The river Ury has one of its sources in this parish, a mile and an half south-east from the church, in a hill called Mishach. It has first the name of The Blackwater, and, after two miles course east, runs into Gady, which, at some distance, after meeting with another brook, takes the name of Ury.

Hills. Hills of note are, The Top of Noth, south-west ; Corskie, south-east ; and The Malshach, south, where is a medicinal well, and store of good moss.

Whitelums is a convenient inn, two miles south-west from the church, upon the west side of Bogy, and on the highway 'twixt Edinburgh and Inverness.

partly in that county and partly in the county of Banff. It is divided, nearly in the centre, by the water of Bogie, into what is called The Barony, and The Braes : the former is in the county of Banff, the latter in the county of Aberdeen." (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xi., p. 95.)]

<sup>2</sup> [“ A stone coffin was lately found on the farm of Coldrain. There was also lately found, in a cairn on the farm of Faich-hill, an urn containing bones ; and a large one, pretty entire, on the farm of Riskhouse.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xi., p. 97.)]

There is a chappel at Braland-know, north-west from Miln of Collithie, and a well at Bucharn, dedicated to St. Andrew, two miles south-west from Huntly.

It is a country very pleasant and fertile of corns and pasturage. Its length, from Coridown west, to Stodfield east, is six miles; and its breadth, from Westseat south, to Edindiack north, three miles.

THE PARISHES OF RHYNY AND ESSIE.

DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISHES OF RYNNIE AND ESSIE.<sup>1</sup> (circa A.D. M.DCC.XXVI.)

ESSIE was once a chappel to the parish church of Rynnies.

In Essie is the manor of Lismore; and in this parish Lugthac was overthrown.<sup>2</sup>

"The parishes of Rhynie and Essie were united at a remote period. The church of Essie was used as a place of worship till about thirty years ago, when it became ruinous: since that time the parish has been generally known by the name of Rhynie only." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xix., p. 289. Edinb. 1797.)]

A DESCRIPTION OF THE PARIOCHES OF ESSIE AND RHYNIE.<sup>1</sup> (circa A. D. M.DCC.XXX.)

THE parioch of Essie has to the north, the parioches of Cabrach and Glass ; to the south, Rhynie and Auchindore ; to the east, Rhynie and Glass ; and to the west, Auchindore and Cabrach.

The church lyes twenty-fye miles north-north-west from Aberdeen ; twenty, south-south-west, from Elgin ; and eight, west from Huntly.

There is only in this parioch the mannor-house of Lesmore,<sup>2</sup> a little way Seats. east from the church.

The Cairn of Mildewen, which, I am told, means the grave of a thousand, or of a great number. Lord Hailes remarks, that Lulach, whom Macbeth's party set up, after the usurper's death, was afterward discovered in his lurking place in the parish of Essie in this neighbourhood ; but, as after a careful search, no marks of a battle can be found in this parish, perhaps this monumental pile may have been raised upon that occasion." (F. Douglas' Description of the East Coast of Scotland, p. 246.) " There is a tradition of a battle having been fought at a remote period about the middle of this parish ; and a large stone, about five feet diameter, on which there are some hieroglyphical characters, standing on The Moor of Rhynie, is said to have been erected in memory of the engagement. Part of this stone has been lately broken." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xix., p. 292.) " There are some monumental stones scattered throughout the parish, rudely carved with hieroglyphics, much defaced." (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number, xlii., p. 1016. Edinb. 1843.)]

<sup>2</sup> [" To the west of The Top of Noth, on the low grounds, there still exist the ruins of the Castle of Lesmore, a stronghold once possessed by an ancient branch of the Gordon family." (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xlii., p. 1016.) At the visitation of the kirk of Rynie, by the presbytery of Strathbogy, on the thirteenth of August, 1651, Sir William Gordoune of Lesmore, " being asked whither or no ther was any land in that parisch that was giuen away (as is commonly said) to The Goodman, and used not to be laboured, answered, It was reported to him that ther was some of that in his owne maines, bot that he had a mynd, be the assistance of God, to cause labour the samen : Quherupon he was commended for his ingenuitie in declareing it, and exhorted to take paines shortly to haue it laboured." (Extracts from the Presbytery Book of Strathbogie, pp. 208, 209. Aberdeen, printed for The Spalding Club, 1843.)

" JACOBUS GORDONIUS, alter, ex familia Lesmorea, Societatis Jesu presbyter, pius et doctus, non tamen aequali in patriam affectu; nam cum in Chronologia sua saepe de Scoticis rebus vere loqui potuisset et splendide, tacere maluit, neque enim ullum de regni nostratis exordio verbum apud illum: fuit tamen magnus vir, seu philosophica seu theologica spectemus studia. Tolosanum societatis collegium et rexit prudenter, et censu auxit feliciter; ac postea Pictaviense semel, Burdegalense iterum, eodem successu pie adminis-

There is nothing remarkable in this parioch, save that the tyrant Macbeth lyes buried here.

Its length, from Bogncloach to Templen, is two miles; and its breadth, from Crane's-miln to The Ton-burn, as much. It produces good corn, in several places, and great plenty of pasture and fowl.

This parioch is now united with RHYNIE, in the shire of Aberdeen, and in the diocese of Murray; which parioch is bounded on the north by the parioches of Glass and Gartlie; on the south, by Clat and Kearn; on the west, by Essie and Auchindore; and on the east, by Kennethmont, or Kingethmont, and Gartlie.

The church stands upon the bank of Bogie, twenty-two miles north-north-west from Aberdeen; as many, south-south-west from Elgin; fourteen, north-north-west from Inverurie; twelve, west-north-west from Old Meldrum; six north-east, from Kildrummy Castle; one mile and an half, from Castle Forbes; and six, south-west from the presbytery seat at Huntly.

There is here no seat, nor river of note but Bogie.

Hills.

The Top of Noth<sup>1</sup> is a very remarkable hill here. It has a fountain on the very summit, without any current from it on the outside; but if a taper rod be put into the vein of the fountain, it comes forth, in twenty-four hours space, at a large issue at the foot of the hill, called Coul's Burn, after being carried three miles under ground by the force of the current.

From The Top of Noth, one has a most agreeable prospect of the pleasant and fertile Strath of Bogie.” (F. Douglas’ Description of the East Coast of Scotland, pp. 245, 246.) Here are monuments in several places, thought to be the remains of heathen superstition, though many other fabulous stories are told of them.

The length of this parioch, from Rhynie, west, to The Raws of Noth, east, is three miles; and its greatest breadth, from north to south, about a mile. It is very fertile and pleasant, abounding with corns and pasturage, and well appointed for moss.

The erection, by Bricius bishop of Murray, of the church of Rynyn into one of the eight prebends of the cathedral church of his diocese, was ratified by his successor, Andrew de Moravia, in a synod of his clergy held in the church of Saint Giles the Abbot, at Elgin, on the fifth of May, 1226: “ Prima [prebenda] est ecclesia de Rynyn cum omnibus ad eam juste pertinentibus . Secunda est ecclesia de Dunbanan et ecclesia de Kynnor cum omnibus ad eas juste pertinentibus . Tertia est ecclesia de Inuerketheny cum omnibus ad eam juste pertinentibus . Quarta est ecclesia de Elchy et de Buttharry cum omnibus ad eam juste pertinentibus . ” (Registrum Episcopatus Moraviensis, pp. 73—76.) See also pp. 90—94. The prebendary of Ryny was bound to provide a subdeacon, to serve as his vicar in the cathedral church. (Id., pp. 94, 361.) Master David Monypenny was prebendary of Ryny, from the year 1473 to the year 1489. (Id., pp. 256, 257, 265.) In the year 1488 he was amerced in the seventh part of the fruits of his benefice, for contumacy and non-residence at the cathedral. (Id., p. 261.) Alexander Hepburne was prebendary of Ryne, from the year 1539 to the year 1547; John Lesly was titular prebendary, Thomas Sutherland, usufructuary, of Rhyny, from the year 1547 to the year 1556; Thomas Sutherland was prebendary, from the year 1556 to the year 1557; James Gordon, son of the Earl of Huntly, was prebendary in the year 1560. ## THE PARISH OF GLAS.

DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF GLASS IN ABERDEENSHIRE. A.D. M.DCC.XXVI.<sup>1</sup>

HE parish of Glass, or the green parish, as it signifys in the Irish, (being so denominate from the green hills wherewith it abounds), lyeth within Strabogy-land ; being made up of the old parochin of St. Walach, and a part of St. Peter's parish, commonly called The Burnt Kirk.<sup>2</sup>

It is bounded on the south and south-east, with the parish of Gartley ; on the west, with Cabrach or Strath Divern ; on the north-west, with Morthloch, the first sea of the Bishop of Aberdeen ; to the north, with Pittrifnie, from which it is divided by a small rivulet, which parteth the shirefdome of Aberdeen from Banff ; on the north-east, with Kearny, which comprehendeth the rest of St. Peter's parish ; on the east, with Dumbenan.

The river of Divern runneth through the said parish, and divides the parish ; whose fountain and rise comes from ane high mountain in the Cabrach, called The Buck, where it is but small, until it meet with the The Black Water, whose rise is in another hill called The Stepler, and entereth into Divern at Auchorichin. This river of Divern runneth from south-east to north-east, untill it entereth into the sea at the burgh of Banff, being weel stored with salmon and other little fishes. There is no bridge on all this river, but one stone bridge at The Raws of Huntly, commonly called Strathbogie.

<sup>2</sup> [“ Two annexations have been made to the original parish of Glass. On the removal of the Bishop from Mortlach, in the twelfth century, a large district of that extensive parish was annexed to those of Glass and Cabrach. The other annexation, consisting of several of the best farms in the east end of the parish, taken from the parish of Drumdelgie or Peter-kirk, now annexed to Cairnie or Botary, was made about the end of the seventeenth century, so that the original parish must have been small.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii, p. 208. Edinb. 1842.) The lands of Edinglassie appear to have been separated from the parish of Mortlach, and annexed to that of Glass in the year 1650. (Extracts from the Presbytery Book of Strathbogie, pp. 113, 146, 147, 148. Stephen, parson of Glas, (“ ego Stephanus persona de Glas subscribo”) is one of the clergy of the diocese of Murray who adhibit their consent to the charter of Bricius their bishop, erecting eight prebends in the cathedral church of the Holy Trinity at Spyny, between the year 1208 and the year 1214. (Registrum Episcopatus Moraviensis, pp. 40—43.)]

The church standeth in the midle of the parish, hard by a little village, where there standeth ane yearly mercat on the third Tuesday of July, called St. Andrews Fair; and is distant from Strathbogy, four miles; from Morthloch, four miles; and from the toun of Keith, four miles; about a quarter of a mile from the water side northward.

In the west end of the parish, standeth the house of Beldorny, upon a rising ground, on the north bank of the river, belonging to Gordon of Beldorny,<sup>1</sup> southwest from the church, two miles.

Below this house, clos by the river side, are two natural bathes, called St. Wellach's<sup>2</sup> Bathes, much frequented in the summer time by sick folk, especially children, lyng betwixt two rocks, about six or seven paces in length, with two of breadth, and four or five foot in deeph, always full of water, even in the greatest drouth. About a quarter of a myle doun the river, clos by the water side, there is ane ruinous kirk, called Wallach Kirk: some part of the walls do remain, with the font. There is a large church yeard about it, where many of the dead thereabout are enterred to this day; with a glebe yet belonging to the minister of the parish, with some marks of the priest his house yet remaining. About a hundred paces beneath the kirk, is St. Walloch's Well, much frequented by sick folk.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>2</sup> [See as to Saint Woloc, or Wolloch, Collections for a History of the Shires of Aberdeen and Banff, pp. 128—130.]

<sup>3</sup> [The presbytery of Strathbogy, at its meeting at Glas on the seventh of June of 1648, enjoined on the minister and elders of the parish that they should “censure all superstition at Wallak Kirk.” (Extracts from the Presbytery Book of Strathbogie, p. 89.) The editor (pref. pp. xiv, xv,) remarks that “the superstition at Wallak Kirk, has continued to the present, or at least, until recent times. The church of the ancient parish of Dumeth, which now forms part of that of Glass, was dedicated to Saint Wolok. ‘Walla Kirk’ and ‘Kirk-yard’ are situated on a haugh, immediately below the castle of Beldorney,

About half a mile below the said Wallach Kirk, lyeth the lands of Dummeath, which were gifted by King Malcome the Second to the church ; but are now in possession of Duff of Braco.

To the north-east, by the river side, standeth the ruinous house of Edinglassie,<sup>1</sup> (a mile below Beldorny, and south-west from the church of Glass, the like distance) once belonging to the late Sir George Gordon of Edinglassie, father to the present Carnousie ; but is now in the possession of the said Braco. About a quarter of a mile below this house, runneth a considerable burn, which runneth into Diverne, over which the said Sir George built a stone bridge of one arch, upon which is engraven his name and arms. Near to this bridge standeth ane miln with a litle village and tolbooth, which he dessigned for a burgh of baronie.<sup>2</sup> At the said vil-lage is holden ane yearly mercat, on the Tuesday before Cristmass, called St. Wal-lach Fair.

On the south side of the river, within fifty paces thereto, standeth the house of Aswanly, south-east from the church half a mile, in a pleasant situation, whereby there runneth a small burn be east the house, called The Hallburn, which falleth into Diverne. Near to the house, within a pair of butts, is a pleasant wood be east the same, with variety of trees and other shrubs, but chiefly of birch and allers, on the precipitous bank of the Deveron. The Saint's Well is near to the church, and was formerly much resorted to by diseased persons ; and, even in our own day, it is said, a so-litary pilgrim may sometimes be seen brushing away the dews, on a summer morning, on his way to 'Walla Kirk.' Two pools, called baths, formed by the flowing of the Deveron between two rocks, were also held in great estimation for effecting cures in the month of May ; and till lately, multitudes of diseased children were bathed in these pools, on the first day of that month, and their caps or some other part of their attire left floating on the water."]

Edinb. 1820. 4to : "As to Innermarky, he was forced for a while to take the hills, and when he wearied of that, he had a retreat of difficult access within the house of Edinglassie, where he slept in litle enough security ; for in September 1584, his house was surprized by laird Robert, and that retireing place of his first entred by Alexander Innes, afterwards of Cotts, who all his life was called Craig in Perill, for ventureing upon Innermarky, then desperate, and whose cruelty he helped to repay in its own coine. There was no mercy for him ; for slain he was, and his hoar head cutt off, and taken by the widdow of him whom he had slain, and carried to Edinburgh, and casten at the King's feet : a thing too masculine to be commended in a woman."] about a mile of length, and a quarter in breadth<sup>1</sup>. And there is two things for which the house is chiefly famous, and these are: primo, a daughter thereof was married to the house of Huntly, who bore two sons, commonly called Jok and Tam: Jok had three sons, Buckie, Pitlurg, and Lismore, whose posterity do possess their heretage and possessions to this day, but of doubtfull precedencey, for the pedigree is uncertain: After the death of the mother of Jok and Tam, Huntley maried the Kings only sister (and settled the estate and honours upon her issue, disinheriting the children of the first marriage), who bore ane only daughter, maried to one of the house of Wintoun, by whom came the Seatoun [- Gordons.] The second thing is the way and manner the ancestors of the present Asswanly came to the inheritance, which was thus: There was one Hutcheon Calder in company with Huntley when he went to the batell of Brichen against the Earle of Crawford, who by his cunning and courage got into the camp of Earle Beardy, and likewise into his tent, who, after supper, brought away the said Earl's drinking cup, (which cup Calder of Asswanlie keeps to this day,) being a large silver cup, overlaid with gold, holding a Scots pint and two gills, of fine engraven and carved work, and with a cape upon which there is ane inscription, which is now lost; wherewith returning to the camp, in the silence of the night, he gave account to Huntley of the situation of Earle Beardy's camp, and number of his forces; and, as a testimony of his being there, produced the said cup: upon which intelligence they attacked Crawfurd in the morning, and defeated his forces; for which service the said Hutcheon Calder obtained the lands of Asswanlie, whose posterity possess it to this day.<sup>2</sup>

In the east end of the parish, and north side of the river, lyeth the ruinous house of Cairnborrow,<sup>3</sup> east from the church a mile, and west from Strabogie

<sup>1</sup> [“There are some fine old trees of ash and plane about the old mansion houses of Aswanly and Beldorney, and the whole scenery about the latter is grand and picturesque.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii., p. 207.)]

<sup>3</sup> [“The day before the battle of Glenlivet, [A.D. 1594.] the Marquis of Huntly came to Cairnborrow, and applied to his lady, who was supposed to rule the roast, for her assistance. She said she had got short warning; but that her old man, with his eight sons, with a jackman and a footman to each, should attend him immediately. Huntly thanked her; and after some more conversation with her, desired Cairnborrow, who had spoke never a word, to stay at home, telling him, that at his advanced years it was not proper to take him along, especially as he had so many of his sons. The old man heard him out, and, shrugging up his shoulders, said, ‘Na, na, my lord, I’ll blead the whelps myself; they’ll bite the better.’ This was at once the reply of a sportsman and a soldier; and the whole family went to three miles, formerly belonging to the Gordons of Carnborow, but now in the possession of Braco ; Sir James Gordon of Park being the only representative of that house.

About half a mile to the east of this, is the King's highway from south to north, which divideth the parish from Cairny ; and, through this parish, along the water side, leadeth the highway from Aberdeen to the Highlands.

In this parish are a great many lime quarries, from which the countrey about are supplied with lime, there being much moss there for burning of it, especially in the south side of the parish ; from which runs a small rivulet called Gordon-burn, which divideth the parish of Glass from the parish of Gartley, and falls into Diveran at Arthlach, where is an inn for lodging passengers.

A DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF GLASS.<sup>1</sup> (circa A.D. M.DCC.XXVI.)

GLASS, or the green parish, (so called, being surrounded with green hills,) is de-battle with the laird at their head. They defeated Argyle, and returned all safe to Cairnborow. The writer has seen a manuscript in which the names of the father, mother, and eight sons are all mentioned : ‘ John Gordon of Cairnborue married Bessie Gordon, daughter to the laird of Buckie, with whom he begat eight sons and three daughters. His sons were 1. John, laird of Cairnborue, afterwards of Edinglassie ; 2. George Gordon of Sorbach ; 3. James Gordon of Fermaghtie ; 4. William, who coft Cairnborow ; 5. Mr. Arthur Gordon ; 6. Thomas Gordon of Aitloch ; 7. Robert Gordon of Gollachie ; 8. Patrick Gordon of Craigton in Sutherland. All these with their father, and nine jackmen and as many footmen, went to Glenlivet battle.’ (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xix. p. 294. Edinb. 1797.)] dicated to Saint Andrew; and here Saint Andrew's Fair is held in July. The church has an isle.

This parish was taken out of Saint Peter's of Drumdelgie, and Saint Wolock's of Dummeth. Here are still to be seen Saint Wolock's Kirk (ruined,) and Saint Wolock's Well, with two pools between two rocks, called baths, esteemed of great virtue, so that children frequent them much in May.

A DESCRIPTION OF GLASS PARISH, IN ABERDEENSHIRE. BY JAMES FERGUSON.

Glass parish is bounded, on the north, by Botriphny and Cairnie parishes; on the east, by part of Cairnie and Dumbennan parishes; on the south, by part of Dumbennan, alias Strathbogie, and Gartly parishes; on the west, by part of Cabrach and Mortlach.

The church lies four miles, west and by south, from Huntly or Strathbogy; and has the river Dovern running near it, on the north syde. The length of the parish from north to south, is four miles; its breadth, three miles.

About a quarter of a mile to the south-east from the church, lies Calder of Aswanlie's house; and to the south-west, two miles, Gordon of Beldorny's.

About two miles south-east from the church, is an old chappel, called Wella Kirk, so termed by the peasants thereabout, who ascribe wonderful qualities to its water. There is another old chapel, two miles south-west from the church, called St. Peter's Kirk, both frequented as burial places.

Since the revolution, the ministers here have been Mr. Alexander Alexander,<sup>2</sup> who died A.D. M.DCC.XIV.; Mr. Syme,<sup>3</sup> now at Mortlach; and the present Mr. Chalmers, who was settled A.D. M.DCC.XXXVII. The number of examinable persons is about nine hundred. The Duke of Gordon is patron.

THE PARISH OF CAIRNIE; OR THE UNITED PARISHES OF RUTHVEN, AND BOTARIE (OR SAINT MARTIN'S KIRK), WITH PART OF DRUMDELGY (OR SAINT PETER'S KIRK.)

A DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF CAIRNIE.<sup>1</sup> (circa A.D. M.DCC.XXVI.)

HIS parish is made up of the three old parishes of Botarie, Drumdelgie, and Ruthven.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> ["Cairny is made up of the united parishes of Botary, Rathven, and part of Drumdelgy. There are three churchyards in the parish: St. Peter's is considered as the most holy ground, and consecrated to the catholics." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xii., pp. 127, 128. Edinb. 1794.)]

"In the church of Botarie there is a fragment of an aisle, belonging to the Gordons of Pitlurg, with the following inscription: 'SIR · IOHNE · GORDONE · OF · PETLVRG · KNYCHT · CAVST · BIG · THIS · ILR · IN · REMEMBERANS · OF · HIS · PREDICES · SOVRIS · QVHA · AR · BUREIT · HEIR · AND · TO · BE · ANE · BVRIAL · TO · HIM · AND · HIS · SVCESSOVRIS · SAE · LANG · AS · IT · PLESIS · GOD · THAY · CONTINEV · 1597.'" (Extracts from the Presbytery Book of Strathbogie, pref., p. viii., note.)

"The gable and belfry of the old church of Ruthven still remain, as well as part of the north wall of the church. In a niche of the latter there is placed the effigy of 'Tam of Rivan,' one of the sons of Sir Adam Gordon of Huntly. He is in full panoply, but there is no inscription to his memory. The belfry of Ruthven still contains a bell of fine tone, on which is the following inscription: Omne regnum in seipsum divisum desolabitur, 1643. The bell is generally known by the name of 'The Wow of Rivan,' and is said to have been brought from the Low Countries." (Ibid.) See also the Archaeologia Scotica, vol. iii., pp. 6—8, and plate 2, figure 3.

"In digging near the present church of Cairney (which is about two miles to the west of the old church of Rivan) a tomb was discovered, composed of flat stones, arranged so as to resemble a box without a bottom. The interior dimensions were four feet in length, three feet in breadth, and eighteen inches in depth. It contained a human skeleton, nearly entire: the head was at the east end of the tomb, and close beside lay an urn containing about a handful of mould. The urn is made of unburnt or half-burnt clay, evidently formed by the hand, without the use of a wheel; and part at least of the ornaments appear to have been impressed by a cord or notched tool. It is about six inches in height, and its circumference at the mouth is about eighteen inches." (Notes on some antiquities in the parish of Cairnie, in Aberdeenshire, by Andrew Dun, F.S.A., Scot. [December, 1836] MSS. Bibl. Soc. Antiq. Scot.) The urn is in the museum of the society.

The churches of Elchies and Botarie were erected into a prebend of the cathedral church of Murray, by Bishop Andrew de Moravia, in a synod of his clergy held at Elgin, in the church of Saint Giles the Abbot, on the fifth of May, 1226 : “ quarta prebenda est ecclesia de Elchy et de Buttharry cum omnibus ad eam juste pertinentibus.” Among the clergy who adhibit their consent to the deed of erection is Gillemor vicar of Botarie : “ ego Gillemor vicarius de Buchtarry.” (Registrum Episcopatus Moraviensis, pp. 73—76.) By the constitutions of Bishop Andrew de Moravia, the prebendary of Botarie was bound to find a deacon to serve as his vicar in the cathedral church (Id., p. 94.) ; but, according to a later usage, (dating probably from the middle of the fourteenth century,) his vicar might be a subdeacon. (Id., pp. 361, xviii.) The manse of the prebendary of Botarie stood near one of the gates of the chanony at Elgin : in a general convocation of the canons of the church of Murray, held in the year 1489, it was ordained “ quod prope mansum de Botare erigatur porta lapidea cum lapideo muro ad hujusmodi portam necessario.” (Id., p. 268.) Lanslot de Moravia was prebendary of Botarie, from the year 1473 to the year 1489. (Id., pp. 256, 257, 264, 265.) In the year 1488, he was amerced in the seventh part of his benefice, for contumacy and non-residence at the cathedral church. (Id., p. 261.) James Strathauchin was prebendary of Botarie, from the year 1539 to his death, in the year 1566 ; William Strathauchin, from the year 1566 to the year 1567. (Id., pp. xxiii, xxiv.) “ Duodecim capellani ecclesiae cathedralis Moraviensis pro se et suis successoribus in et super se acceptant ad celebrandum hebdomadatim tres missas ad altare Sancti Jacobi pro magistro Jacobo Stratauchin rectore de Botare, cum uno anniversario, in modum sequentem, videlicet : unam missam die Dominico, de Dominico seu festo occurrente dicto die, cum collecto pro salute amici; alteram die Martis, de Spiritu Sancto, cum collecto pro salute amici; tertiam die Jovis, de Corpore Christi, cum collecto pro salute amici, quamdui magister Jacobus vivit, et ipso defuncto, cum collecto pro amico defuncto ; cum anniversario annuatim pro quondam magistro Gilberto Stratauchin ejusdem patruo, durante vita dicti magistri Jacobi, die 26 mensis Martii ; et ipso magistro Jacobo defuncto, eodem die pro dicto magistro Jacobo : Necnon ad celebrandum aliud anniversarium die 9 mensis Septembbris annuatim pro animabus patris, matris, parentum et benefactorum dicti magistri Jacobi : Ad distribuendum quoque annuatim pauperibus summam 20 solidorum, pro anima dicti magistri, 10 solidos in die Commemorationis Animarum, et 10 solidos in die Parasceves. Ex altera parte vero dictus magister Jacobus facit fundationem capellanae praefatae ecclesiae de summa 26 solidorum annuatim, de domo quam nunc tenet Florentius Runsiman, et de novo stabulo lapideo ad finem orientalem mansi de Botarie per ipsum edificato ; et dat praefatis capellanae et magistro Hugoni Cragye eorum nomine summam 120 librarum ad emendum terras seu annuos redditus pro dictis suffragiis fiendis et elemosina distribuenda ; pro qua summa 120 librarum acquiritur annuus redditus 8 librarum et 3 solidorum praefatis capellanae applicandus. Licitumque erit capellanae praefatis cum velint suas vices praefatorum suffragiorum renunciare, dummodo non participabunt de commodo. Ad quae premissa observanda capellani subscripti se astringunt et obligant pro se et suis successoribus : Hugo Cragye, Tyberius Winchestre, Johannes

The churches of Ruthven and Dippil were erected into a prebend of the cathedral church of the Holy Trinity at Spyn, by Bricius bishop of Murray, between the year 1208 and the year 1214: "octava canonia ecclesia de Rothuan et ecclesia de Duppil cum omnibus earum justis pertinentiis." Among the clergy who adhibit their consent to the erection is Hugh parson of Ruthven: "ego Hugo persona de Rothuan." (Registrum Episcopatus Moraviensis, pp. 40—43.) The erection was confirmed by Pope Innocent III., on the twenty-second of December, 1214. (Id., pp. 43, 44.) The prebendary of Ruthven and Dippil was bound to provide a priest to serve as his vicar in the cathedral church. (Id., pp. 94, 361.) William Mowalt was prebendary of Ruthven and Dippil from the year 1473 to the year 1489. (Id., pp. 256, 257, 259, 265.) William Hepburne was prebendary of Ruthven and Dippil from the year 1554 to the year 1557; Adam Hepburne, from the year 1560 to the year 1567; and Alexander Ogilvy, in the year 1567. (Id., pp. xxiii, xxiv.) "Mr Adam Hepburn, parson of Dipple, granted to John Gordon of Craigullie a tack or lease of the teynds of Ruthven in Strathboggie, of date July 18th, 1574, to which did consent and subscribe George bishop of Murray, Alexander Dunbar dean, James Muirton chantor, Dunbar archdean, John Kneycht parson of Duffus, William Sutherland parson of Moy, Robert Keith parson of Kinore, Alexander Leslie parson of Botarie, William Patterson subdean, and Archibald Henderson parson of Kingusie. The original was in the hands of Mr Milne, late of Speymouth." (Shaw's History of the Province of Moray, pp. 416, 417.)

"Assedatioun be the Bisshop of Murray, to Johne Gordoun of Carrinborow and Elizabeth Gordoun his spous, for nynetene yeris, of the teind schaves of the paroche of Drumdalgye, within the diocie of Murray and sheriffdome of Aberdene, for thretty thrie pundis sex schillingis and aucht penneis yerely: witnesses, Androw Moncreiff, David Cumyng, Robert Hepburne, Sir James Sandeson, and Sir John Gibson person of Unthank: at Spyne and Elgin, 20 August 1569." (Registrum Episcopatus Moraviensis, p. 400.) "Literae assedationis ab Episcopo Moraviensi cum consensu capituli datae Georgio Barclaye de eodem et Margaretae Ogilvye ejus sponsae, decimaru garbalium parochiarum de Grantuly et Drumdalgye, pro 19 annis, solvendo inde annuatim 290 mercas: testibus domino Waltero Ogilvy de Boynd milite, Jacobo Dunbar de Tarbart, Georgio Ogilvy de Auquannanye, Andrea Moncreiff juniore, dominis Jacobo Sibbald et Alexandro Robertsone servitoribus Episcopi: apud ecclesiam cathedralem Moraviensem, 24 Octobris 1556." ## THE PARISH OF ABERCHIRDER (OR SAINT MARNAN'S KIRK.)

HE church of Aberchirdir is dedicated to Saint Marnan. This Saint, who flourished about the middle of the seventh century, is reputed to have been a person of extraordinary sanctity, and of an apostolical spirit, travelling indefatigably, and making conversions everywhere. He dyed very old, and was buried at Aberchirdir, where the tradition is that he usually resided. In this parish ther is a stone (called Saint Marnan's,) hollowed out a little in the middle, and lying on a hill, where it is believed this Saint commonly rested. His feast is on the [second] of March, according to King's Calendar, which places him in the year D.C.LV. Camerarius nearly agrees with King. The collect used for his festival in Aberdene diocese was this : “ Deus qui es vita in te credencium famulos tuos tibi suppliciter deprecantes exaudi : ut dum Beati Marnani confessoris tui atque pontificis solennia agimus in tui nominis amore valeamus ferventer accendi : Per Dominum.”<sup>2</sup>

The Aberchirdirs of That Ilk possessed this parish of old, till Innes of That Ilk married the heiress, and so came to have this Saint for his patron.

Just beneath the church is Saint Marnan's Ford; and on a hill hard by is a stone, called Saint Marnan's Chair.<sup>3</sup>

At Chappeltoun, above half a mile beneath, is Saint John's Well, and Saint John's Ford over Doovern.

Mr. David, (son to Mr. John, minister at Dalmaik), second and last Gregory of Kinnairdie,<sup>4</sup> had a son, Dr. David, author of the Astronomy, but born, as we have

<sup>3</sup> [“ Aberchirder was the old name of this parish, which is now called Marnoch, the church being dedicated to St. Marnoch.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. iii. p. 94. Edinb. 1792.) “ A well near the manse is called the Saint's well, and another, at no great distance, the Lady's well. An annual market on the second Tuesday of March, for horses and cattle, is called Marnoch fair. On the bank of the Deveron is a place called Chapelton, where, no doubt, there had once stood a place of worship.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii. pp. 382, 384, 386. Edinb. 1842.)]

In “ Ane Rentall of the Freris Predicatoris of Elgin, in anno 1555,” occurs “ Item, the baronie of Abircheirdor, x merkis.” (Registrum Episcopatus Moraviensis, p. xxxii. note.)]

(The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii. p. 383.)

In the charter room of the Duke of Roxburghe, at Floors Castle, there is a deed of resignation, dated at Edinburgh, in the year 1510, by Robert Colvill of Hilton, into the King's hands, in favour of Walter Innes of Touchis, of the dominical lands of Kynnardy, with their pertinents, called le Langhelche, Forrestaresete, and Stokyfelde, and the forty-three shilling land of Myreside, lying in the barony of Aberkerdor, in the shire of Banff.]

"Near the centre of the parish stands the mansion-house of Auchintoul, once the residence and property of general Alexander Gordon, who entered the service of Russia as a cadet, under Peter the Great, and rose to high power and command in his army. He wrote in two volumes the history of his great master and friend. He died aged eighty-two years, and was buried in the churchyard here, but no memorial marks the spot." In Dei nomine amen . Per hoc presens publicum instrumentum cunctis pateat evidenter quod anno Domini millesimo • ccc° • septuagesimo primo • duodecimo die mensis Augusti hora tertiarum • Indictione nona • pontificatus sanctissimi in Christo patris et domini nostri Domini Gregorii divina providentia Pape undecimi anno primo • In mei notarii publici et testium subscriptorum presentia personaliter constitutus discretus vir dominus Andreas Ox rector ecclesie de Inuerarity Sancti Andree diocesis procurator religiosorum virorum dominorum Abbatis et conventus monasterii de Aberbrothoc Sancti Andree diocesis quandam cedulam papiream ex una parte quasi totaliter conscriptam in manu sua tenuit et ipsam de verbo ad verbum perlegit • cuius quidem cedula tenor sequitur in hac forma . . .

In Dei nomine amen . cum appellationis seu provocacionis remedium in subsidium oppressorum seu verisimiliter se opprimi timentium a jure salubriter sit inventum . hinc est quod cum vos reverende pater et domine Domine Alexander Dei gratia episcope Moraviensis nuper ad monasterium de Scona Sancti Andree diocesis . in coronatione Domini nostri Regis Roberti jam regnantis . verbaliter intimasti venerabili in Christo patri domino Johanni abbatи de Aberbrothoc ejusdem Sancti Andree diocesis quod ad instantiam magistri Eustachii vicarii de Inuernys vestre diocesis super quibusdam decimis ejusdem ecclesie processum ordinasti contra eum . cuius copiam cum idem Abbas a vobis cum instantia petivisset . et de eo antea non audivisset . respondisti quod ipse ad partes vestre Moraviensis diocesis per se vel per procuratorem declinaret ubi processum ipsum dimisisti et petitam copiam absque difficultate sibi traderetis . super quo idem Abbas satis confidens dum esset aliis monasterii sui negotiis impeditus ad vestram presentiam in Moravia discretos viros dominum Jacobum Fraser militem et Alexandrum Skirmechour procuratores pro se et conventu suo cum pleno mandato pro habenda ipsa copia ad finem deliberandi super dicto processu in quo sibi prodesse posset vel obesse specialiter destinavit .

quibus dictis Jacobo et Alexandro premissa a vobis potentibus sepius et instanter adtunc sibi tradi seu diem et locum sibi assignari ad exhibitionem ipsius processus ut facultas sibi daretur ipsum describere et copiare . respondebatis expresse quod non vacavit vobis ad tunc premissa petita implere nec scivistis diem aut locum alios assignare . unde iidem dominus Jacobus et Alexander sentientes Abbatem et conventum predictos in hoc contra justiciam pergravari protestabantur de appellando . et tedio affecti ad dominum suum distantem a vobis per plures dietas non sine gravibus laboribus et expensis infecto negotio sunt reversi . Unde Abbas ipse volens indemnitati sui monasterii precavere et per frequentes precum effusiones vestram putans captare benevolentiam . me Andream Ox procuratorem suum ad petendum et recipiendum copiam processus predicti et ad alia facienda que ad indemnitatem monasterii predicti necessaria forent seu eciam opportuna cum pleno mandato transmisit . quam quidem copiam quamvis sepius et diligenter petivissem ipsam tamen tradere noluistis . Unde ex hiis et aliis pro loco et tempore proponendis perpendens quod parti adverse nimium favetis nitentes jus ipsorum Abbatis suppressere et conventus . ex eo quod copiam processus predicti prout debetis tradere recusatis nec ipsum describendi conceditis facultatem . A vobis domine Alexander episcope Moraviensis et a processu vestro predicto . anormalo ut suspicor et inepto nisi de novo fabricetur cum ipsum non audeatis in lucem ducere . ad sacrosanctam sedem apostolicam ego Andreas procurator predictus ipsorum Abbatis et conventus et procuratorio nomine in hiis scriptis provoco et appello . et apostolos instanter instantius et instantissime super hoc mihi peto exhiberi . subjiciens ipsum Abbatem et conventum et monasterium predictum et omnes sibi adherentes seu adherere volentes ac universa eorundem bona mobilia et immobilia tuitioni defensioni et protectioni sedis apostolice supradicte . Et ne vos domine Alexander episcope seu aliquis deputatus a vobis contra ipsos Abbatem et conventum per viam suspensionis . excommunicationis . fructuum sequestrationis vel interdicti sententias aliqualiter procedatis vel procedat . cum sitis ipsius monasterii et monachorum patens inimicus . ipsos de triginta quinque libris sterlingorum de fructibus ecclesie sue de Abirkethor contra Deum et justiciam ac indulta apostolica eidem monasterio concessa alias temere spoliando . quod probare intendunt ubi supra . super qua eciam injuria ad eandem sedem apostolicam eorum nomine personaliter vos appello . protestans nomine quo supra hanc appellationem innovare corrigerem emen-dare ac eidem addere et detrahere prout dominis meis supradictis et eorum consilio videbitur expedire . Ne vero processus vester sic sub modio conservatus Abbatii et conventui predictis seu suo monasterio obsit . si per eum ad missionem in possessionem bonorum mobilium vel immobilium juste vel injuste forsitan processeritis . quod tamen facere non debuistis ipsis legitime non vocatis . vobis ipsorum et procuratorio nomine pro recuperatione possessionis ejusdem et interrumpenda prescriptione annuali cautionem offero et sum prestare paratus de stando juri et ea facere que de jure pro recuperatione possessionis ejusdem habent fieri in hoc casu . Si vero ad diffinitivam sententiam per vos sit forsitan processum . quod esset satis absurdum audire cum contra inauditam partem nichil poteritis diffinire . sententiaque ipso jure non teneat cum citationis edictum ad partis notitiam non devenit . et quamvis ipsa sententia ipso jure . penitus sit nulla . ab ea tamen provoco et appello in hiis scriptis . petens apostolos instanter instantius et instantissime sicut supra . quos si denegaveritis iterum provoco et appello ut supra . protestans ex abundanti nomine ipsorum Abbatis et conventus quod propter istam appellationem non intendunt recedere ab aliis appellationibus per ipsos prius interpositis sed eisdem inniti et per eas cum opus fuerit intendunt se juvare . Post cujus quidem cedula lecturam fui per eundem dominum Andream procuratorem predictum cum diligentia requisitus ut super prescripta appellatione sibi facerem publicum instrumentum et ipsam appellationem sic interpositam in publicam formam redigerem et eandem signo meo consueto signarem . suis tamen sumptibus et expensis . Acta lecta interposita et publicata fuit hec appellatio in ecclesia cathedrali de Elgyne in Moravia sub anno die mense inductione et pontificatu prenotatis . Presentibus venerabilibus et discretis viris magistro Willelmo de Chesholme thesaurario Moraviensi . domino Johanne Bell rectore ecclesie de Kyngorn Sancti Andree diocesis . dominis Johanne de Flandris . Johanne de Tarres capellani . Andrea de Feltoun . Thoma Glaswrycht . causa decimali inter ipsum Abbatem et vicarium de Inuernys mota et coram me dependente et habita . a quo gravamine appellat etc . quod utique non est verum . verum est enim quod dum procuratores ipsius Abbatis copiam processus petebant sibi dari respondi quod processum penes me non habui remanentem sed possent venire ad locum ubi causa agebatur et scriptores erant qui processum sive acta illa judicialia si que forent conscripserant et possent habere copiam quam petebant . non enim in omnibus locis tabellionum copia datur querentibus nec sunt ibi notarii curie aut scriptores jurati qui facta judicialia conscribant et apud quos remanere debent sicut alibi habentur sed nunc unus nunc aliis qui magis in promptu haberit poterit talia scribit . et sic propter defectum notariorum talia judicialia quandoque depereunt . non tamen in defectu judicis qualicunque . nec tenebar ut credo servare eum processum si quis esset semper et ubique exhibendum in sacco paratum quem per annum . . . . et ultra respicere vel audire contumaciter et contemptibiliter spernebant ac etiam recusabant . testis enim michi est ipsa veritas quod nunquam ipsi Abbatii vel procuratoribus suis processum sive copiam processus sponte aut ex proposito vel malicia subticui vel denegavi aut in aliquo contra ipsum processi quod quantum in me fuit jus vel causam juris sui perimeret vel lederet in quocunque . Subinferendo tamen interserit quod appellat a me et a processu meo anormalo . et in fine subdit cum citationis edictum ad partis noticiam non devenit . quod utique caret effectu et ipso primordio veritatis . presertim cum in principio litis hujusmodi cause mote ad primum citationis edictum comparuerunt viri venerabiles videlicet magister Willelmus de Spiny et Johannes de Bothuyll canonici Moravienses una cum aliis adjunctis procuratoribus ipsius Abbatis procuratorium sufficiens exhibentes qui in ipsis causa et lite diversis diebus et vicibus processerunt . et exinde in continuatione processus nulla facta fuerat citatio . quando apud ipsam ecclesiam de Inuernys super cuius fructibus litigabatur fuerat publicata et proclamationes publice facte ibidem coram populo ubi ipse Abbas habuit et habet procuratores suos continue qui ipsum premunirent et premunire possent si vellent et reddere certiorem super quocunque litis vel cause strepitum vel processu . et non subito nec propere fiebant citationes vel proclamationes hujusmodi sed palam et publice et inter missarum solempnia etiam in ecclesia majore sive cathedrali ubi ipsa causa tractabatur proclamabantur et per intervalla quadraginta dierum et quandoque octo septimanarum . nec volente altissimo tenebar ad alienam diocesim mandata edicta vel citationes transmittere ipsi qui certus fuit vel esse debuit quod causam initiatam sive inceptam in elusionem juris judicis et partis non deserere sed usque in finem continuare oportebat . Ex quibus evidenter colligitur quod non potest nec potuit hujusmodi processum factum vel habitum nec aliquam ipsius particulam ignorare nec sana conscientia dicere quod parte non vocata ad ipsius noticiam non devenit . ymmo verius non videtur audiri appellans cum maliciose et scienter neclixerit appellationis a jure statutum terminum observare pretextu cuius vim vel formam appellationis non continet nec poterit de jure continere . Secundo subjungit vocans me ipsorum Abbatis monachorum et monasterii inimicum patentem . annexens et specificans causam . videlicet quod ipsos de . xxxv . libris sterlingorum de ecclesia sua de Aberkerdor spoliavi . quod utique certo certius et luce clarius est omnino veritate destitutum et expresse menda- cium continere . ac ipsam spoliationem et crimen spoliationis et omnem cujuscunque pecunie indebitam receptionem diffiteor nego et abnuo cum non sit officium sacerdotis . et dato quod de ipsa ecclesia de Aberkerdor aliqualis summa pecunie unde conqueratur vel murmuret idem Abbas ad aliquem de officiariis meis vel alium nomine meo devenerit . quod tamen non fateor nec credo verum esse . nuncquam tamen animo modo vel forma spoliandi vel alias quod absit injuriandi quantumcunque modicum habitum fuerat vel receptum . Et si quid etiam causa vel via juris ordinarii modo et ordine consueto nomine meo fuerit receptum ad respondendum debite me semper optuli et offero coram quocunque bono viro infra diocesim vel extra . sic quod spoliationem et omnem actionem seu causam spoliationis pretensam omnino nego repello penitus et excludo . Verum cum per ipsum Abbatem ficticie et malitiose ac minus credibiliter tangatur et opponatur mihi de causa spoliationis vel criminis . profecto contra ipsum opponentem merito et realiter potest obici et obicio quod opponit ac de hujusmodi spoliationis criminis ac expressa et violenta ecclesiastice libertatis et immunitatis invasione merito et effectu potest argui et notabiliter ac probabiliter reprehendi . presertim cum ipse Abbas flamina livoris succensus et ultiōis voto non zelo justicie instinctus . postquam hujusmodi causa inter ipsum et prefatum vicarium de Inuernys mota fuerat et incepta . spreta omissa ac etiam omnino contempta via juris ordinarii . in contemptum inobedientiam et irreverentiam mee jurisdictionis ordinarie ymmo verius sedis apostolice sub cuius protectione speciali degit ecclesia mea Moraviensis supradicta . ex certa scientia et malitioso proposito ac

" Sir Robert of Innes, the thirteenth of his family, is he who got the name of Good Sir Robert, and married Dame Jannet of Aberchirder, daughter to Sir David, the thane of these lands; had a considerable estate by her, which his successors kept two hundred and forty years; and, from the tyme of that marriage (which was befor the fourteen hundredth year of God) to this day, have born three boars' heads erased (the armes of Aberchirder*) quartered with their own three starrs, as appears by their seals. Of this marriage came Sir Walter of Innes, laird or lord of that Ilk, as he is termed in writ, and is the fourteenth of the family. See the chartor of confirmation from King James the Second, in anno 1450, narrating, verbatim, the chartor given anno 1426, by John Lord Lindsey of Byres, son of Sir William the Lindsey, knight, to Jannet of Aberchirder and Walter of Innes, her son, upon all annualrents or superiority that was formerly due to him or his, furth of the lordship of Aberchirder, excepting the superiority and following of Cramy, etc. This chartor is concevied in broad Scots, dated at Edinburgh the sixteenth day of January 1426. The eldest son and heir of Sir Walter, was Sir Robert (called III Sir Robert). See a precept of clare constat, relative to a retour granted by John Lord Lindsay of Byers, for infesting of Robert of Innes, son and heir to the deceast Sir Walter of Innes of that Ilk, knight, in all and haill the lordship of Aberchirder, with the pertinents, dated at The Byers the fourteenth of July 1456. That James, called James with The Beard, is successor to Sir Robert, appears from the precept of sasine which is given by John Lord Lindsay of the Byers, overs lord of the lands of Aberchirder, to Berowald of Innes, John of Innes, Andrew of Innes, and James the Barde, his baillies, for infesting of James of Innes of that Ilk in all the saids lands of Aberchirder, with the pertinents formerly belonging to vnuhall Sir Robert of Innes of that Ilk, knight, and father to the Dauid de Aberkerdor burgensis de Donde is a witness to a grant made by Alexander de Moravia of Culbyn and Newtoun, to another burgess of the same town, dated at Scone, on the eleventh of March, 1391. (Registrum Magni Sigilli Regvm Scotorvm, p. 201.) On the twenty third of March, in the same year, King Robert III. confirms a grant to David de Abirkerdor, by William of Angus, abbot of the monastery of Lendoris, of an annuity of seven merks from certain lands in the burgh of Dundee. said James of Innes, and wherein the said Sir Robert dyed last infest, etc. dated the first day of February 1464, and sealed." (Id., pp. 20, 21, 23, 25—27.)

In the charter room of the Duke of Roxburgh, at Floors, there is an instrument of sasine, dated the third of February 1484, proceeding upon a precept from the King's chancery, in favour of David Lord Lindsay of the Byres, as nearest heir of John Lord Lindsay of the Byres his father, in the barony of Aberkirdar in the shire of Banff.

In the same archives, there is an instrument of sasine, dated the sixth of February 1472, in favour of Alexander Innes, son of James Innes of that Ilk and of Janet Gordon, of an annuity of forty merks, granted to him by his father, from the lands of Auchindaner, Culvy, Romore, Corsky, Elryk, and Auchintoule, in the lordship of Abirkerdour and shire of Banff. The witnesses to the infestment are Andrew Done of Rattie, Robert Innes, John Innes, Andrew Innes, George Gordone, Andrew Arde of that Ilke, esquires; Sir Patrick Fyffe vicar of Abberkerdore, and Sir Robert Clark, chaplains. Alexander Gordon of Megmar, brother german of George earl of Huntly, and uncle of Alexander Innes, appears as his procurator. Andrew Murray of Culbardine acts as the bailie of James Innes of that Ilk: his seal, exhibiting the three stars of Murray, with a mark of difference in the centre, is still attached to the deed.

On the fifteenth of March 1479 "the summondis made on the lard of Innes anent the landis of Abirkerdour and Crony is continewit be the lordis of counsale to the secund day of the next chekkre with continiacioun of dais / and memorandum that the King is informit that thir landis ar in his handis for falt of entre of the Lorde Ilis." ## THE PARISH OF ROTHIEMAY.

DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF ROTHIEMAY.<sup>1</sup> (circa A.D. M.DCC.XXVI.)

HE church<sup>2</sup> of Rothemay, dedicated to Saint John, or to Saint Durstan, (I know not certainly which,) stands amid a wood of birch and alder, on Dovern.

Rothemay belonged once to the Abernethies of Saltoun; then, to the Gordons; now, to the Ogilvies.<sup>3</sup>

“Renovatio assedationis decimarum garbalium ecclesiae commensalis de Rothemaye ab Episcopo Moraviensi cum consensu capituli sui concessa Willelmo domino de Abirnethy Rothemay et Saltoun, et Alexandro magistro Saltoun ejus filio, pro novemdecim annis: solvendo annuatim quadraginta libras; et dictam ecclesiam reparando et supportando: Testibus Georgio comite de Huntlie, magistro Georgio Gordoun constabulario de Baidyenocht, dominis et magistris Magno Vause rectore de Jy, Johanne Gordoun vicario de Keth, Hugone Cragy, Willelmo Wyisman notariis, et domino Thoma Wallace vicario de Spyne: apud ecclesiam cathedralem Moraviensem, 16 Aprilis 1540.” (Id., p. 419.)

“Tack of the personage of Rothemay and of the personage and vicarage of Keth set be the Bisshop of Murraye with consent of the cheptour to Alexander Lord Saltoun for nyeten yeris: payand thairfor yeirlie 460 merkis to the Bisshop at twa termis Sanct Serfis day and All Hallowmess, and to the vicar pensionar of Keith his yeirlie pensioun, and that in consideratioun of the inlaik of corps presents, Pasche fynes, umairt claitis and utheris profeittis of the said vicarage of Keith deducit be the trubill of the kirk laitlie maid, quhilk was the maist part of the profeitt of the said vicarage; and the said Lord to uphold, beit and mend during the forsaidis yeris the queir of Rothemay in theking and utheris necessaris reparatioun concerning the personage thereof upoun his awin costis: At Spyne and Elgin, 28 Maii 1570.” (Ibid.)

Extracts from the registers of the kirk-session of Rothiemay, between the years 1604 and 1686, are printed in Gordon's History of Scots Affairs, vol. i. appendix to the preface, no iv., pp. [i.]—[xii.] .

<sup>3</sup> [“There is a tradition here, that Mary, Queen of Scots, passed a night in the house of Rothiemay; and her bed-room is still pointed out. This tradition is confirmed by the authority of Buchanan, who, describing Mary's journey to Inverness, says: ‘proxima nox ad Rothimaium, Abrenethiorum villam, satis tranquille transacta est.’ (Rer. Scotic. Hist., lib. xvii., cap. xxxvi.) Next to the Abernethies, a family of Gordons were proprietors of Rothiemay till the end of the last, or the beginning of the present century, when it was purchased by Ogilvie, whose son sold it to William Lord Braco, father of the present

Earl of Fife. The most ancient part of the house, which was going fast to ruin, his lordship has lately taken down. About a furlong north from the house is a Druidical temple, which, though situated in the middle of a beautiful and fertile field, a veneration for antiquity has hitherto preserved entire." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xix., pp. 386, 392. Edinb. 1797.)

" Mr. James Ferguson, well known for his publications on astronomy, was a native of this parish. This information I received from his brother, John Ferguson, an elder of this parish, who died very lately. He told me that his father's name was John Ferguson, his mother's, Elspet Lobban; that they dwelt at the Core of Mayen; that both he and his brother James were born there; that he himself was born in the year 1708, and that his brother James was two years younger. The session-record, which is now before me, confirms this information in every particular: James Ferguson was born on the twenty-fifth of April, 1710. His brother John, who had read the memoirs of Mr. Ferguson prefixed to his works, said, that, though generally agreeable to fact, they were not equally correct in every particular." (Id., p. 392.)

Mr. James Gordon, author of a "History of Scots Affairs, from MDCXXXVII to MDCLII," and of "A Description of Both Towns of Aberdeen," was parson of Rothiemay from the year 1641, to his death in the year 1686.]

<sup>2</sup> [From a copy in Ferrerii Historia Abbatum de Kynlos, pp. 89, 90. Edinb. 1839 ; collated with another in Shaw’s History of the Province of Moray, p. 406.

“ Dominus Andreas, abbas a Kynlos secundus, obiit anno Domini 1189. Putatur vixisse in officio annos 32. Cum nequirt dominus Andreas, mortuo Rege David, par esse tantae fundationi a Kynlos, non destitit Malcolmum Regem ad id operis solicitare ; verum per intestinas seditiones non licuit Malcolmo multa facere. Extincto autem Malcolmo, successit Gulielmo Rex, vir pius, qui domino Andreae et surgenti monasterio a Kynlos baroniā a Strathily dono dedit.” (Ferrerii Historia Abbatum de Kynlos, pp. 22, 23.)

“ Dominus Johannes Ellem, abbas a Kynlos xviii., obiit 4. Idus Februarii anno Domini 1467. Sub hoc abbate vixit Dominus Joannes Marr, vir (uti fertur) magni roboris, et Strathiliū custos.” (Id., pp. 30, 31.)

“ Dominus Thomas Chrystallus, abbas a Kynlos xxii., anno Domini 1499. Id. Januarii, a domino Gulielmo Culross, declaratus est abbas monasterii a Kynlos, sub Alejandro summo disse · concessisse · et hac presenti carta mea confirmasse · Deo et Beate Marie et Omnibus Sanctis · et abbati ac monachis de Kynloss ibidem Deo seruientibus et imperpetuum seruituris · totam terram de Strathylaf · cum omnibus suis iustis pertinenciis ad eandem terram iuste spectantibus seu pontifice ejus nominis sexto. Obiit Strathily, ea nocte quae sequitur 4. Cal. Januarii, hora fere undecima, anno Domini 1535. . . . Sed illud majoris fuit momenti, quod adversum Alexandrum Gordonium comitem Huntleum, toto septennio, non minore prudentia quam animi constantia, ab hoc abbate pro suo monasterio tuendo gestum est. Cupiebat Alexander, ex Strathily baronia quam habent monachi et abbas a Kynlos, agrum Ballacht suae possessioni accedere; et cum nullum in ea re jus haberet, abbati tamen in rectum propugnanti, non seniel mortem comminabatur. Verum nec terroribus illis adduci potuit abbas ut comiti cederet, nempe ad mentionem mortis intrepidus semper in anteriora sagacissime proficiscebatur. Tandem, post infinitos et animi et corporis labores, acerbissimamque contentionem, optato fine potitus est abbas. Ac in hujusce rei memoriam Alexander comes suae cessionis publicum instrumentum imperavit, cui et sigillum suum, ut in Kynlos videre est, propendet. Huic impeditissimo negocio accessit Alexandri ab Huntli comitis soror Agnes, quam olim in uxorem Jacobus Ogilvius a Finlater habuisse memoriae proditum est. Cooperat illa cum abbate, de agro apud Strathily nomine Hawinthfe, spiritu plenam contentionem; sed abbatis vigilantia, protinus hanc flamمام repressit; nec luctari diu potuit illa quin statim causa caderet. Ita res ad abbatem meritissime rediit. . . Et, ne quis secum reputet, multa ex his parvo aere ita confecta ut nihil unquam gravioris operis sit aggressus, subscribam magnifica quaedam aedificia quae variis locis per eundem sunt erecta. Illud in primis occurrit quod in sui monasterii agro, seu mavis Strathily baronia, nunc cernitur. In formam arcis illic satis amplam nec minus fortem a fundamentis construxit domum, anno Servatoris Christi quinto et vicesimo supra sesquimesimum. Huic domui porticum cum gradu lapideo pro foribus adjectis. Proxime, ad paranda cibaria, elegantem popinam cocis erexit. Atque in arcis ambitu, veteres et cariosas aedes, in usum postea futurum multiplicem, instauravit per singula . . . Duas moletrinas apud Strathily aedificavit . . . Posuit et in sacello apud Strathily, non contemnendam Divae Virginis et Matris in sole statuam . . . Ea nocte, quae sequitur quartum Calendarum Januarii, hora ferme undecima, in suo arce Strathilly, vitam morte vir optimus dominus commutavit. In mortis articulo, sacro primum ceromate delibutus, non semel pientissimi Jesu misericordiam imploravit, petiitque a suis familiaribus si quid acrius interdum in illos fecisset sibi in Illius nomine qui pro nobis peperdit in ligno condonarent; remittebat ille vicissim, non solum suorum familiarium, sed omnium hominum adversum se noxam. Et frequenter Divum Hieronymum, quem praecipuum habuit dum viveret inter Divos patronum, inclamabat, ut, detersa omnium vitiorum in hoc mundo contracta macula, se Domino Jesu conciliaret. Postremo, ubi destituerat eum sermo, infinities crucifixi typum osculabatur, et sublata manu se crucis signaculo identidem muniebat. Ac dum talia verae pietatis argumenta designat vir laudatissimus, animam Christo reddidit. Tertio autem Calendas Januarii delatus ad monasterium sub noctem in sepulchro a se constituto proxime ad summam aram tumulatus est. Requiescat in pace. Amen." (Id., pp. 35, 36, 68, 69, 72, 73, 76, 82—84.)

Anno, 1538, idem dominus Robertus Reid abbas particulam quandam terrarum in Strathily quam occupabat Alexander Ogylvius a Fynlater jam ante multos annos, post varias juris disceptationes coram dominis parlamenti et Rege, tandem recuperavit." (Id., pp. 38, 39, 40, 47.)

"The Abbots of Kinloss had in Grange a castle in which they frequently resided, built on the top of a small mount, partly natural, partly artificial, surrounded with a dry ditch, upon the south side of a rising ground, overlooking extensive haughs, and the small river Isla meandering through them for several miles. Of this castle there now remains nothing but a heap of rubbish. At the foot of a small natural mount called The Ladyhill, adjoining the eminence on which the castle stood, is a spring called The Ladywell. Another spring on the south bank of the Isla, directly opposite to the church door, is called The Croikwell. The Gallowhill, a small hill lying north of the church, is so called because it was the place of execution for criminals tried and condemned in the Abbot's regality court." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. ix., pp. 550, 552, 555, 581.)]

“ Dominus Jacobus Pont, aliquando subprior, nunc confessor, vir probus; de quo in vita Thomae abbatis plura scribimus.” (p. 37.) “ In primis, dominum Jacobum Pont. studiose utpote hominem, Aberdonias in Fratrum Praedicatorum collegium formandum literisque divinioribus imbuendum, Dominus Thomas Abbas transmisit. Erat tum temporis in eo loco vir pius Frater Joannes Adami, Dominicani ordinis in Scotia primas, et theologiae scholasticae doctor insignis, cuius auditor nequaquam ineptus fuit Dominus Jacobus. Ubi accepisset abbas illum proficere, non multo post alterum similiter monachum ad literas apposite natum, cui nomen est domino Waltero Hethon, eadem cura instituendum, eo destinavit. Postquam comperit abbas utcunque in illis literis sufficienter promovisse, ut jam posset uterque domi studendo et docendo per se graviora indies cognoscere, ad monasterium ambos revocavit. Dominus Jacobus subinde, aliquot ex junioribus fratribus domi in diatribis non segniter scholasticis exercuit; domino autem Waltero cessit cantoris chorii provincia quam etiam nostro tempore retinet. ## THE PARISH OF KEITH.

DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF KEITH.<sup>1</sup> (circa A.D. M.DCC.XXVI.)

HE parish of Keith has for its tutelar Saint Summarius, or Samarine, whose fair is held here on the first Tuesday in September.

I find one of Saint Colms disciples called Summarius, in Jonas's Life of Saint Colm quoted in the Scottish Historical Library, page 233.<sup>2</sup> Mr. Thomas Innes takes it to be Saint Malrubius the Hermit<sup>3</sup> (quhose feast is on the twenty seventh of August) called in Irish Sa-Maruve. On Samarevis day (the twenty seventh of August) there is a fair at Forres.

A DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF KEITH IN BANFFSHIRE. A.D. M.DCC.XLII.<sup>4</sup>

Keith parish in Banffshire, is bounded, on the north, by the parishes of Bellie and Raffen (the first whereof lies west from the second); on the east, a little northward, by Grange; on the south, by Cairnie, alias Martin parish; on the west, by Boharm; and on the south west, by Botriphny.

It is enclosed by four hills. On the north side is the hill called Old-More, where one may travel five miles all upon fine heather; under which lies moss ground, containing great plenty of fir under ground, which the people thereabouts dig up, some two fathoms deep; and by this, they are served with winter light, and timber for their houses. In this hill is a large peat bank, about six or seven foot deep, and near two miles long, which may be carried forward some miles without interruption, no stones being there found. The country there abounds much with sheep, having plenty of pasture. On the west is the hill of Muldarie ; on the south, The Cards (Tinkers) Hill ;<sup>1</sup> and on the south-east by east, is The Ballach Hill, affording good pasturage, and fire for that side of the parish.

The church stands upon a little bit of rising ground, in the middle of a little country village, called Keith ; which is situated in such a hollow place, that it can scarce be seen from any place at a quarter of a miles distance from it. In this town is a weekly market, held upon Fridays ; and about a quarter of a mile southward from it, near a small moss, is held a great fair, upon the first Tuesday of September yearly, called Summer Eves Fair, which is said to be the greatest of its kind in Scotland.<sup>2</sup>

The parish is four miles long, and as much broad. The most of it, being arable ground, produceth great plenty of grain.

The church lies six miles north by west from Strathbogy, or Huntly. A small river, termed Yla, runs close by the north side of the church, having a bridge of one arch : this river takes a little bend toward the north, at an old ruinous house called Achynachy, two miles south west above the church, where the parish borders with that of Botriphny. From Keith, thro the rest of the parish, this river keeps a pretty straight course eastward, and falls over a steep rock about a quarter of a mile below the church, at an old ruinous house called Milltown of Keith : the place where the water falls into, hath been sounded with a line of many fathoms, but no bottom found. It runs eastward thro the parish of Grange, and runs into the river of Dovern about five miles and a half below Keith, which

<sup>1</sup> [“There are in this parish the remains of several Druidical circles, now mostly demolished for the sake of their stones. There is one yet very distinct on the top of a hill vulgarly called The Card’s Hill. A little below this circle, there is a very fine fountain of excellent water, called Taber-chalich. Near another of these circles, there is another well of the same kind, to which some persons resorted, even in the memory of persons still alive, always leaving some offering behind them.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. v. pp. 429, 430. Edinb. 1793.)]

“There was, in the north part of the parish, a rig of uncultivated land, called The Gun Rig, set aside to propitiate the evil spirits : and tradition says, that, when the farmer, about fifty years ago, was about to improve it, one of his cattle fell down dead. A stone coffin, containing some ashes, was found in a heap of stones, which the present tenant removed, he having succeeded in improving the land, without injury to man or beast.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii, p. 389. Edinb. 1842.)]

<sup>2</sup> [“An annual fair, of very old standing, held here in September, was, some sixty or seventy years ago, the general mart for merchant goods from Aberdeen to Kirkwall : it is still the best frequented market in the north for black cattle and horses.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. v., p. 421. See also The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii p. 390.)] is half a mile south-west from the church and house of Rothemay, the next parish below Grange.

A large bourn, called The Loan Bourn, runs eastward about half a mile northward from the church, and falls into the river Ylay a little below Miltoun.

The principal gentlemen's houses are these following :

The house of Achynanye, lying a mile and a half south-east by east from the church, at the north side of The Ballach Hill : it belongs to Thomas Grant of Arntilly, esquire, who is one of the justices of peace in that country.

A short mile westward from which is the house of Birkinburn, belonging to William Gordon, esquire.

A little to the north from these two houses, there is a small bourn, called The Bourn of Drum, on which is a mill called The Mill of Tarnash, wonderfully situated betwixt two rocks, one whereof hangs very much over the mill, the water falling from a very great height upon the wheel thereof.

Two miles west and by south from the church, is the house of Achanacie, now possest by the widow of one Cadie Mitchel, who built it.

A quarter of a mile westward from this house, is a large Episcopal meeting house, at a place called Rosarie, where the minister has a very great auditory. This is the most westward place of the parish, and has The Loan Bourn running closs by the south side thereof, which bourn runs by the north side of the house of Achanacie.

A short mile north from Achanacie, and two miles west from the church, lies the ruinous house of Allanbuie ; a little above which is the house of Muldarie, where the Episcopal minister uses to live.

Near a mile from Allanbuie lies the house of Haughs, also ruinous, a large mile north-west from the church.

A quarter of a mile north from Haughs is the house of Tarmore, lately possessed by Alexander Sutherland of Kinmenity, who, in the beginning of the year MDCCXLII., fell over a fore stair at Fochabers, and broke his scull ; of which he died, leaving a poor widow and a numerous male family in great misery.

Half a mile from Tarmore, eastward, lies the house of Kinmenity, which is going to ruin.

A short mile east from Kinmenity is the house of Newmill, possessed by George Gordon of Glengerach, esquire : it is a mile and a half northward from the church. These places are each below Haughs, about a quarter of mile, on the north side of the river.

A little bourn runs southward into Yla, a little to the east of Kinmenity. In this bourn are many steep rocks, one of which the bourn falls over about eight foot : the rock forms a circle on each side of the place where the water falls ; which circle is about six paces wide, within, at the foot ; but the rock hangs inward so all around, that it is not above five paces at the top, and on every place it is a good deal higher than that where the water falls over; and the only way to get within it, is by wading up the bourn, where the rock divides to let it out.

Opposite to the house of Newmill is the ruinous house of Kempcairn, on the south side of the river Yla, a long mile eastward from the church. And half a mile east by north from Newmill, lies the small house of Glengerach, two miles north and by east from the church. A large bourne runs by the east side of this house, and takes its course southward: it has a bridge of one arch, and runs into the Yla near two miles below Keith, dividing the parish from that of Grange, of both which Sir Arthur Forbes of Craigivar is patron.

The parish of Keith contains about sixteen hundred examinable persons, and has for its minister Mr. John Gilchrist, who has been there almost all the time since the revolution.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> [“ Tradition has recorded two skirmishes, that have happened in the parish: one, in 1746, when about seventy of the Campbells, and thirty of Kingston’s horse, were surprised by the rebels in the old village, and dispersed or taken after considerable slaughter; the other, about a century before, when a Peter Roy Macgregor, the head of a band of robbers, who infested the country, was taken, and his gang completely dispersed by Gordon of Glen-gerrick, then one of the heritors, after a desperate resistance.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. v., p. 427.)]

“ This parish cannot boast of having given birth to any distinguished characters, if we except the illustrious Mr. James Ferguson, well known for his mechanical and philosophical genius and publications.” (Id., p. 429.) But see above, p. 226, note.

Malcolm, vicar of Keith, (“ego Malcolmus vicarius de Keth subscribo”) is one of the clergy of the diocese of Murray who adhibit their consent to the charter of Bricius their bishop, erecting eight prebends in the cathedral church of the Holy Trinity at Spyny, between the year 1208 and the year 1214. (Registrum Episcopatus Moraviensis, p. 43.) And he is one of the clergy, in synod assembled, who subscribe the new constitutions of Bishop Andrew de Moravia, at Elgin, within the church of Saint Giles the Abbot, on the fiftieth of May, 1226. (Id., p. 76.)

Master John Gordoun appears as vicar of Keith from the year 1540 to the year 1547. (Id., pp. iiii., 395, 400, 410, 415, 419.)

A manuscript rental of the see of Murray, for the year 1565, preserved in the library of the Faculty of Advocates at Edinburgh, bears, on its last leaf, this note: “ This rentall was writhen by maister Wm Wysman wicar of Keith quhae was the best wryttar within the bisschopreik of Murray at that tyme.” (Id., p. vi., note.)

The worthy and pious Patrick Forbes of Corse was parson of Keith from his admission into holy orders, in the year 1612, until his election to the bishopric of Aberdeen, in the year 1618. See Dr. George Garden’s Vita Johannis Forbesii a Corse, §. vii., ap. J. Forbesii Opera Omnia, t. i. Amstel. 1704. fol.; Bp. Burnett’s Life of Dr. William Bedell, pref. DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF MURTLACH.<sup>6</sup> (circa A.D. M.DCC.XXVI.)

URTLACH (so named quasi, mortis lacus) is dedicated to Saint Moloch. It is a large church.<sup>7</sup> Saint Beyne lies in the postern, and his two successors in the church-yard. It has a bell, called Ronnach, said to have been brought from Rome.

Hard by it is Balveyney castle, so named from Saint Beyne.

Dulan river is said to have been dammed up, and then let out upon the Danes. It runs into Fiddich, which is a swift river.

A DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF MURTHLACK.<sup>1</sup> (circa A.D. M.DCC.XXX.)

The parish of Murthlack, in the shire of Banff, hath to the north, the parish of Boherm; to the south, the parish of Cabrach; to the east, the parishes of Glass and Botriphny; to the west, the parish of Aberlour.

The church lies eighteen miles from the town of Banf, and six long miles from the village of Keith. It stands close on the west side of the rivulet Dullan, which runs into the water of Fiddich, a quarter of a mile from it northwards.

There are three small rivers that have their rise in this parish; two of which are exceeded by few in the island for their clear stream and pleasant aspect, having their banks covered, from their fountains until they run into Spey, with birch, alder, and hazle, and that in great abundance.

its walls are the very same as in the beginning of the eleventh century; and they are so strong that it is thought they may stand for hundreds of years to come. The doors and windows, and the simplicity of the whole edifice, bear witness to its age. The windows are long narrow slits of six feet high, and only ten or eleven inches wide on the outside, but so much sloped away as to measure at their utmost projection ten or twelve feet within. Its shape is that of an oblong, of about ninety feet by twenty-eight. The choir on the east end is twenty-seven feet long, and a few feet higher than the rest of the building. On the ridge of the choir is what they call The Three Bishops, a pyramid like stone of little show, with the semblance of a face on each of its sides, right rudely cut. It has been said that the effigy of Bishop Beyn is to be seen in the wall near the postern door, whereabout it is imagined the tomb of the three first bishops might be found under a vault; but this, at least as to the effigy, is not the case; and for the tomb there has been no search. Nor are there any effigies in the church, except one at full length, over the door which leads from the choir to The Leslie's Aisle, or burying ground, (with no inscription, but called a predecessor of the Kinninvie family); and two half lengths of Alexander Duff of Keithmore, and Helen Grant of Allachie, his spouse, on the south side of the choir, with a Latin inscription. There is another inscription in marble, on a monument to Mr. Hugh Innes, first presbyterian parson of Mortlach after the revolution. There are likewise some very ancient looking gravestones with Saxon characters, below the seats and in the passages. On the banks of the Dullan, a little below the church, appears the foundation of a house overgrown with grass, which would be walked over with little notice, if one were not told that here was the Bishop's palace. Not far thence is a part of the public road, on the opposite side of the same rivulet, leading to the east, called Gordon's Cross. A round stone, which is thought to have been the pedestal of the cross, remains to be seen. There is on the glebe a standing stone, having on two of its opposite sides some rude and unintelligible sculpture." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xvii. pp. 430—432, 445. Edinb., 1796.) "There is on the glebe a large upright stone about seven feet high, on the one side of which are rudely carved a cross and two figures of animals, and on the other side a snake." (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xi. p. 106. Edinb. 1836.) "The church was a little modernized by an addition made to it seven years ago." (Id. p. 108.)]

The lesser of these two is Dullan, having its rise in the hill of Curquhaby, and from the foot of Belrinnis, a large mountain lying partly in Inverawn and partly in Aberlour parish, four miles from the church to the south-west.

The greater is Fiddich, having its rise partly from the hill and partly from the Alachymachan, five large miles from the church to the south-west. From thence, running north-east four miles, through a glen and forrest to which it gives name, it hath, on its northern bank, the decayed Castle of Auchindown,<sup>1</sup> standing on a rising ground, a mile from the church southwards; and from thence a short half mile, the house of Keithmore, standing on the same side of the river: turning its course here north-westwards, a large mile to the place where it receives the rivulet of Dullan, a short quarter of a mile from the church to the north; and from thence running northwards a short quarter of a mile, it hath, standing on its western bank, the old Castle of Balvanie,<sup>2</sup> at first built by and since rebuilt by Stewart, Earle of Athol; and from thence, a quarter of mile northwards, a new house, built by William Duff of Braco, anno M.DCC.XXIV. It is distant from Elgin to the north ten miles, from Aberdeen to the south-east thirty-two miles, from Castle Gordon six miles. Half a mile from Balvanie, northwards, stands the house of Tullich, on the east side of the water of Fiddich; and half a mile from that, to the north, stands the house of Kinninvay, on the same side of the water. This rivulet of Fiddich, half a mile below Kinninvay, turning north-west, and continuing its course that way for a large mile, falls into Spey at a place called Boat of Fiddich, in the parish of [Aberlour.]

The third rivulet is I'la, having its rise in that place where Mortleich marches with Botriphny, from a loch commonly called Loch Park, lying from Balvanie a mile to the east, scarcely a quarter of a mile in breadth where brodest, and half a mile in length, and sending forth its waters eastwards through the parish of Botriphny, gives rise to the water of Ila.

Four miles from the church, eastwards, stands the house of Edinglassie, with a burgh of barony and tolbooth, and yearly fair, close on the west side of the river Doovern, which separates the parish of Glass from the parish of Mortleich.

It is of an fruitfull soill.

The King is patron.

<sup>2</sup> ["Balvenie Castle is placed on a beautiful eminence on the banks of the Fiddich, a little below its confluence with the Dullan. In the front and high over its iron and massy gate, which still remains, is the motto of the Earls of Athol, ' FVRTH · FORTVIN · AND · FIL · THI · FATTRIS · '" (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xvii. pp. 440, 441.)]

A DESCRIPTION OF MORTLACH PARISH, IN BANFFSHIRE, BY JAMES FERGUSON.
A.D. M.DCC.XLII.<sup>1</sup>

Mortlach parish is bounded, on the north, by a part of Aberlour and Boharm parishes; on the east, by part of Botriphny and Glass, as also by part of the river Dovern, and the parish of Cabrach; and on the west, by Glenlivet and part of the parish of Inner Avin. Its length, from east to west, is eighteen miles; its breadth, about five miles.

The church lyes west by south of Huntly.

The house of Balveny, belonging to Lord Braco, lies one mile east and by north from the church.

The houses of Kininvie and Tullich lie, the first, a mile and an half, the other, two miles, north-east from the church. These houses, together with the church, have the river Fiddich running by them, which discharges itself into that of Spey a little below Kininvie.

An old Castle, called Auchindown, now ruinous, lies three miles south from the church.

As to its antiquities and etymologie of its name, consult Boetius. It was one of the four ancient bishops sees in Scotland.

There are about fifteen hundred examinable persons. The King is, or at least is reputed to be, patron.

THE PARISH OF MORTLICH.<sup>2</sup> (A.D. M.DCC.LXXV.)

This parish, in ancient writings, is called Morthlach, probably from Mor-Lag, id est, a great hollow; for it is a deep hollow, surrounded with hills. Before I enter this parish, I shall a little describe the two rivulets that water it: Fiddich, quasi Fiadhidh, id est, woody, because its sides are covered with wood, hath its rise in the hills south of Mortlach towards Strathdon, and running north-east about three miles, turneth almost due west for a mile, and then, after a course of three miles due north, it falleth into Spey. The other rivulet, Dulenan, (properly Tuilan, from tuil, a flood, because of its impetuous current) takes its rise in the hills of Glenlivat, and running north-east parallel to Fiddich (but separated from it by a ridge of hills) three miles, it mixes with it three miles above Spey.

The parish is in length, from north to south, four miles, and as much in breadth from east to west, besides some skirts that lye near to Botrifnie, Glas, and Cabrach. It is all environed with hills, except a small opening to the north.

The church standeth on Dulenian, a little above the confluence with Fiddich, two miles south-south-east of Aberlaure, and about three miles south of Boharm.

The parish (all in the shire of Banff) consists of the barony of Kininvie, the lordship of Balvenie, and the barony of Achindune.

The house of Kininvie stands upon the rivulet Fiddich, on the east side, environed with natural wood. A branch of the family of Lesly of Balquhain has enjoyed this barony about two hundred and fifty years; and of this branch the Earl of Leven is descended.

Next, up Fiddich-side and the west side of Dullen, are the lands of Balvenie, which comprehend Bochram, Little Tullich, Parkbeg, Cluniemore, Clunie-beg, Pitvaich, Littoch, etc. Of the commissioners sent to London, on the nineteenth August, M.CCCC.XXIII., to relieve King James I., was James Douglas of Balvenie. (Rym. Foed., vol. x., p. 298.) And in M.CCCC.XLVI., John, son of James Earl of Douglas, was created Lord Balvenie; who, being forfeited in M.CCCC.LV., for joining in his brother's rebellion, King James II. granted Balvenie to his uterine brother, John Steuart, Earl of Athole. That family sold it to Aberneathie, Lord Salton, who, about M.DC.VI., dispossessed it to Lord Ochiltree. From him it came to Sir Robert Innes of Invermarkie, and from Sir Robert's heirs to Sutherland of Kinminnity. About anno M.DC.LXVI., Alexander Lord Salton, reduced his father's disposition to Lord Ochiltree, and conveyed the lands in M.DC.LXX. to Arthur Forbes, brother to Blackton, from whom Alexander Duff of Braco adjudged them, and got possession about M.DC.LXXXVII., and they are now the property of the Earl of Fife. Upon an eminence, on the west bank of Fiddich, stood the castle of Balvenie, the ancient seat of the lordship, commanding a pleasant view of the valley; and a half mile below it, in a moist, low, and unwholesome soil, there is built a fine house of modern architecture, one of the seats of the Earl of Fife, adorned with gardens and planting.

In the south of the parish, betwixt the rivulets of Fiddich and Dullen, is the barony of Achindune. This was formerly a part of the lordship of Deskford; and Achindune and Forrest of Fiddich were a part of the barony of Ogilvie, erected in M.D.XXVII. (penes Findlater.) Afterwards it was purchased by, and is now the property of, the family of Gordon. The castle stood on a mount above the water of Fiddich; and from it Glenfiddich stretches south-west about three miles among the hills, where is fine pasture ground and a forest of red deer.

Upon the head of Dullen lieth Glenrinness, a fertile valley, two miles long. The south side of it is a part of the barony of Achindune, and the north side a part of the lordship of Balvenie. Along the north side runneth Benrinnes, a high hill, and a landmark for sailors in sailing into the Moray Firth.

church was dedicated to St. Bean, the first bishop of it. The King presented the present incumbent; but the Earl of Fife claims the patronage. The stipend is not modified, for the ipsa corpora of the small teinds are paid. But the stipend, including element money, amounts to about a thousand pounds Scots. The salary of the school is legal. William Duff of Dipple mortified five hundred merks to the school, and a thousand pounds Scots to the poor, and there are six hundred and seventy-five pounds Scots more mortified for the use of the poor. The catechisable persons are eighteen hundred, of which about sixty are Roman Catholicks. The protestant ministers are: Mr. John Maxwell,<sup>1</sup> anno M.DC.XV.; Mr William Forbes, anno M.DC.XL.; Mr. Alexander Seton, anno M.DCL.; Mr. Arthur Strachan, anno M.DC.LXXXVIII.; Mr. Hugh Innes,<sup>2</sup> ordained about M.DCC., died in March, M.DCC.XXXIII.; Mr. Walter Syme,<sup>3</sup> from Glass, admitted the twenty-second of April, M.DCC.XXXIV., died sixth January, M.DCC.LXIII.; Mr John Touch, from Aberlaure, admitted twenty-sixth of October, M.DCC.LXIII..

Before I proceed to the next parish I shall give some account of

The family of Duff.

The family of M'Duff, Earl of Fife, (descended, in my opinion, of King Duffus, who was murdered in Forres, about anno DCCCLXV.) was ancient and eminent, and flourished until the year M.CCC.LXXXV. The surnames of Weem, McIntosh, Tosheach, Shaw, Spens, Fife, Duff, etc., are branches of that great family. I have presbytery of Strathbogie, and synod of Moray: before that time it was in the presbytery of Fordyce, and synod of Aberdeen; and, in connection with Fordyce, the minister of Mortlach, it is said, has still a vote for delegates, from that presbytery, to elect the professor of divinity of King's College of Aberdeen." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xvii. p. 414.)]

<sup>1</sup> [Afterwards successively Bishop of Ross in Scotland, Bishop of Killela and Achonry, and Archbishop of Tuam, in Ireland. He was found dead in his closet, kneeling on his knees, in the attitude of prayer, on the fourteenth of February, 1646.]

In the year 1558, the parsonage of Murthlac was held by the well-known John Leslie, afterwards Bishop of Ross.]

<sup>2</sup> ["This gentleman, it is said, was possessed of a considerable share of bodily strength and personal courage; and, in those days, if various anecdotes which are told of him be true, it seems he had occasion for the exercise of these qualities in the discharge of his clerical functions." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xvii. p. 432.)]

<sup>3</sup> [See above, p. 185, note 3. "There was an uncommon mortality in this parish in the year 1763, occasioned by a putrid fever; and, during the rage of the disease, the frost was so very intense that it was necessary to kindle fires in the churchyard to soften the ground for digging the graves: in the month of January, Mr. Walter Sime, the minister, was one of thirteen corps unburied at the same time." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xvii. pp. 437, 438.)] before me a genealogical manuscript account lately written, deducing the Lord Braco from the family of Fife. It consists of three successive branches.

I. The Earls of Athole of the name de Strathbolgie, descended of the Earls of Fife, thus: (1) David, son of Duncan, the sixth earl. In a donation to the see of Moray by Malcolm, the seventh earl, ‘David filius quondam Duncani comitis de Fife, frater meus,’ anno M.CC.XXVI., is witness. Collatio Malcolmi comitis de Fyfe, episcopo Moraviensi, ‘testibus Duncano et Davide fratribus meis.’ ‘Conventio inter Andream Episcopum Moraviensem et nobilem virum Davidem de Strathbolgie filium quondam Duncani comitis de Fyfe,’ anno M.CC.XXXII. (Cart. Moray). He was father of (2) John de Strathbolgie, who became Earl of Athole in right of his wife Ada, co-heiress of Henry, Earl of Athole, and was father of (3) David, who married Isabel, co-heiress of Lord Chilam, and died M.CC.LXXXIV. His son (4) John, executed at London, M.CCC.VIII. His son (5) David, killed at Kilblain, anno M.CCC.XXXV., by his wife Joan, daughter of John the Red Cumming Lord Badenoch, had several sons, whereof the eldest (6) David, was forfeited for abetting the English interest, and died in England, anno M.CCC.LXXXV., without male issue. This deduction of the Earls of Athole is instructed from the chartulary of Moray, and Sir William Dugdale.

II. branch, deduces the Duffs of Muldavid and Craighead thus: (1) John, second son of David the fifth Earl of Athole, quitted the name of de Strathbolgie and assumed that of Duff, and had the lands of Muldavid and Craighead, etc. His son was (2) David, etc. The line was carried down by eleven generations to John Duff, writer<sup>1</sup> in Aberdeen, who died in Holland, anno M.DCC.XVII., without issue; and in him the direct line of Craghead became extinct. I confess all the descents are well instructed, except the first. But one will desiderate, How doth it appear that John, called the first of Craghead, was the second son of David, fifth Earl of Athole? or was at all his son? that ever he bore the name of Strathbolgie? that he assumed the name Duff? and for what reasons he did so? For all, or any of those, there is no voucher. Be it as it may, I pass on to

III. branch, the family of Clunybeg and Braco. The direct line of Craighead becoming extinct in John Duff, anno M.DCC.XVII., his grandfather John (who died about M.DC.LX.) was twice married. By his first wife, Isabel Allan, he had John, father of the foresaid John the writer. And by his second wife, daughter of John Gordon of Carnborraw, he had (1) Adam Duff of Clunybeg, who, by his wife, daughter of Gordon of Birkenburn, had Alexander of Keithmore, William, ancestor of Drummuir and Crombie, John, ancestor of Corsindae, Peter and Adam. Clunybeg died anno M.DC.LXXVII. (2) Alexander of Keithmore married Helen, daughter of Alexander Grant of Ellachie, and had Alexander of Braco, William of Dipple, and Patrick of Craigston. (3) Alexander of Braco married Margaret, daughter of Sir William Gordon of Lesmore, baronet, and had (4) William, who, leaving no male issue, was succeeded by his uncle, (5) William of Dipple, heir male and of entail, who, by his wife, daughter of Sir George Gordon of Edin-glassie, has left a son, (6) William. This gentleman married Jean, eldest daughter of Sir James Grant of Grant, and hath a numerous issue. In M.DCC.XXXV., he was created Baron of Kilbryde, in the county of Cavan, in Ireland; and, by patent to him and to his heirs male, dated tenth of April, M.DCC.LIX., he was created Viscount MacDuff and Earl Fife of that kingdom.

William, second son of Clunybeg, was father of Alexander, who married Katherine Duff, eldest daughter and heiress of Adam Duff of Drummuir, and by her had Robert of Drummuir, John of Coulbin, and William of Muirton. Robert was father of Archibald, now of Drummuir. William had a second son, James, father of William Duff of Crombie, advocate. Of Clunybeg's third son, John, is descended Duff of Corsindae. And of Keithmore's son, Patrick of Craigston, are descended Hatton, Kemnay, Craigston, etc.

THE PARISH OF BELLIE (OR FOCHABERS.)

A DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF BELLIE.<sup>2</sup> (circa A.D. M.DCC.XXVI.)

BELLIE is dedicated to Saint Peter.

Here is Saint Ninian's chapel, rebuilt about thirty years ago by . . . . . Dutchess of Gordon, quhairin the late Bishop Nicolson <sup>3</sup> lies buried.

the reformation." (From a MS. Account of Scottish Bishops in the library at Slaines.)]

"(1.) Mr. Winchester (commonly called Mr. Dunbar) who usually resided with the Duke of Gordon.

This parish in Irish is called Bealidh, id est, Broom.<sup>2</sup> It is situated on the east bank of the river Spey, at the mouth of it.

The church,<sup>3</sup> dedicated to St. Peter, standeth near the bank of the river, two miles above the frith. The patronage did belong to the Prior of Urquhart; and with the lordship of Urquhart came to the Earl of Dunfermline. It now belongs to the Duke of Gordon, by the purchase of Urquhart. The stipend, by decree, is twelve hundred merks, and one hundred merks for communion elements. The school is legal. Mortifications for the poor are six hundred and fifty pounds Scots: catechisable persons, sixteen hundred. On the grave-stone of Mr. William Sanders is inscribed, that, 'he lived an hundred and eight years, and was minister of Bellie seventy-seven years'. The ministers since the reformation are: Mr. William Sanders minister before M.DC., demitted in M.DC.LXIII.: James Horn, assistant, ordained on the twenty-eighth February M.DC.LVI., transported to Elgin, M.DC.LIX.: William Annand, assistant, ordained on the nineteenth May,

"(2.) Dr. Robert Nicholson, brother to Sir George Nicholson of Kemney (a lord of session) and son to Thomas Nicholson, burgess of Aberdeen, by . . . . daughter to Birkenbog, where the bishop was born. He had formerly been a professor of philosophy in Glasgow. He resided (after he became a bishop) at Presholm in Rathven parish, near Gordon Castle, and dyed under Clem[ent xi.]

"(3.) Dr. John Wallace (formerly an episcopal minister, and chaplain to John Earle of Perth, who was afterwards created Duke of Perth.)

"(4.) Dr. James Gordon (son to Clystirim, and himself heir) who resides at Clystirim in Rathven, and having gone A.D. M.DCC.XXIII. to confirm in the highlands and isles, returned about Christmass, the same year, having confirmed, it is said, about three thousand. It is talked, that such as have been confirmed, are troubled with the second sight no more."]

<sup>2</sup> [“Bellie has been imagined by some to be the Gaelic word Bellaiddh, signifying ‘broom’; but others, more justly, reckon it a compound from the two Gaelic words Beul-atlh, meaning ‘the mouth of the ford.’ This etymology is perfectly natural, as, a little above the church, there was, till the prodigious flood in the year 1768 destroyed it, and opened various channels, one of the finest fords upon Spey. There the Duke of Cumberland, with his Majesty’s army, passed with great safety in the year 1746, a few days before the battle of Culloden.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xiv. p. 263. Edinb. 1795.)]

<sup>3</sup> [“About a mile north of Gordon Castle, and three miles south of the frith, is the church of Bellie, upon the old east bank of the Spey, soon to be translated to Fochabers, where a very commodious and elegant church is to be built.” (Id., p 265.)]

M.DC.LXIII., lived after the revolution: Charles Primrose, ordained on the twenty-fifth of February M.DCC.II., transported to Forres, M.DCC.VIII.,: Thomas Mac-Culloch, from Birnie, admitted on the fourth of May M.DCC.IX., died on the twenty-sixth of November M.DCC.L.: Patrick Gordon, from Rynie, admitted on the third of October M.DCC.LI., died at London, February, M.DCC.LXIX.: James Gordon, admitted on the fourteenth of March, M.DCC.LXX.

The great ornament of this parish is the house of Gordon Castle, the seat of the Duke of Gordon. This house was founded by George Earl of Huntly, who died A.D. M.D.VII. It is a large and grand pile; but consisting of several apartments built at different times, it cannot be very regular. The rooms of state are grand, well finished, and furnished with fine pictures; and the library containeth a valuable collection of books. The house is environed with parks and inclosures, and much planting, old and young. The gardens are spacious, well laid out, and watered with a pond and jet d'eau. But the house, by its low situation betwixt the river to the west, and a high hill to the east, commandeth no view of the adjacent country. It was formerly called, The Bog of Gight,<sup>1</sup> in Irish Bog na gaoith, id est, The Windy Bog.

Closs by the castle standeth the village of Fochaber, so called, in my opinion, from the Irish Fo-habir, id est, below the well;<sup>2</sup> for, above it, in the face of the hill, is a well or fountain, the waters whereof serve the town. The town is a burgh of barony, hath a weekly market, and in the centre of it there is a court house, with a steeple of modern architecture. It has a post office, and at the west of it, is the passage over Spey, called The Boat of Bog, upon the post road.

As little more of this parish than the town of Fochaber falleth within the province of Moray,<sup>3</sup> I shall not dwell any longer on the description of it. In some

<sup>1</sup> [“This habitation was long known all over the north by the name of The Bog, for an obvious reason. Spalding, if I remember right, seldom uses any other term for it. The castle had doubtless been built here with a view to strength by ditches and inundation.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xiv. p. 265.)]

<sup>2</sup> [“Fochabers is compounded of the two Gaelic words, foich, a green plain, and aber, a bay or junction of two waters; the burn of Fochabers here uniting itself with the Spey. Some years ago, Fochabers was removed southward, from the vicinity of Gordon Castle, to a rising ground, near a mile distant, and built on a neat plan, with an extensive square in the centre.” (Id.)]

<sup>3</sup> [“Fochabers is in the county of Murray, and the other, or country part of the parish, is in Banffshire.” (Id. p. 263.)]

The boundaries of the earldom of Murray are thus described in the famous charter by which King Robert I. (between the years 1307 and 1324) conferred that great territorial dignity on Sir Thomas Ranulph: “Incipiendo videlicet ad aquam de Spee sicut cadit in mare • et sic ascendendo per eandem aquam • includendo terras de Fouchabre • parishes (as in this) I shall meet with families of eminence and distinction, of which I shall only give a succinct account, as a full historical or genealogical deduction would too much swell this work.

The Family of Gordon.

This is one of the most illustrious families in the kingdom, for quality, antiquity, possessions, and people. There are besides the Duke, three peers of this name, videlicet, The Earls of Aberdeen, and Aboyne, and the Viscount of Kenmure, with a numerous and opulent gentry. I leave others to fetch the Gordons from Gordinia in Thessaly, or to derive them from Caesar's Gorduni. I shall only observe, that Adam de Gordon (1) (so he is commonly called), ancestor of this family, for his services to Malcolm Kenmore, obtained from him the lands of Gordon in The Merse. The Chartulary of Kelso, and the Ragman's Roll, give some account of Richard (2), probably son of the said Adam, (3) Thomas senior, (4) Thomas junior, (5) Alicia and her husband Adam Gordon, father of (6) Sir Adam Gordon, whose eminent services to King Robert Bruce were rewarded with a grant of the lordship of Strathbogie, forfeited by David de Strathbogie lord thereof. And though this lord was, in King David Bruce's reign, restored to his own lands, yet, afterwards revolting to the English, he was again forfeited, and the grant of the lordship was confirmed by King Robert II., anno M.CCC.LXXVI., to the grandson of Sir Adam Gordon, videlicet, (7. 8.) John, son of Sir Alexander (penes Ducem Gordoniae.) To this John, King David Bruce had given the Forrest of The Enzie and Boyne. John was killed in the battle of Otterburn, anno M.CCC.LXXXVIII. And his son, (9) Sir Adam, was killed in the battle of Hamildun, anno M.CCCC.I., leaving no issue but a daughter and heiress called (10) Elizabeth. This lady married Alexander Seaton, second son of Sir William Seaton of Winton, which occasioned the distinction of the Seaton Gordons, and the ancient Gordons; for she had two uncles, commonly called, Jock of Scurdarg, and Tom of Ruthven, and who (says Straloch) bore the paternal arms, without any mark of illegitimacy; and of those the ancient Gordons are descended.

Elizabeth's son (11) Alexander, assumed the name of Gordon, and was created Earl of Huntly, anno M.CCCC.XLIX. He did the most significant service to King James II. by defeating the Earl of Crawford in the battle of Brechin, on the eighteenth of May, M.CCCC.LII., and thereby breaking the confederacy against that King. This was fully rewarded by a grant of the lordship of Brechin, the hereditary sheriffship of Aberdeen, and Crawford's precedence in parliament. Yet, upon the King's reconciliation to Crawford, Huntly generously resigned Brechin in his favours, and got the lordship of Badenoch, and the lands of Brae-Lochaber. His great estate was increased, by marrying the only child of Sir William Keith, and grand-daughter of Sir Alexander Fraser, thane of Cowie, with whom he got the lands of Touch-Fraser, Aboyne, Glentanir, Glenmuik, and Clunie. And, by his second wife, Aegidia Hay, heiress of Bog of Gight, and a part of Enzie, he obtained these lands. In a confirmation of his lands by King James II., anno M.CCCC.LVII., the onerous cause (says Burnet of Crimond) was, for keeping the crown on our head: but this charter is now lost. Dying anno M.CCCC.LXXIX., his son (12) George was lord chancellor, founded Gordon Castle,<sup>1</sup> erected the Priory of Kingussie, and left three sons, videlicet, Alexander; Adam, who married the heiress of Sutherland; and William of Gight. (13) Alexander was made hereditary sheriff of the county, and constable of the castle, of Inverness: and, by a charter, dated the twenty-fourth March, M.D.V., got the castle of Inverlochie, in Lochaber, and the adjacent lands (carta in publicis archivis); and, dying M.D.XXIII., was succeeded by his grandson, son of John, who died M.D.XVII., videlicet, George, a man of unbounded ambition. He was lord chancellor, and on the thirteenth of February, M.D.XLVIII., got a charter of the earldom of Moray, the lordships of Abernethie, Petty, Brachlie, and Strathern, the castles of Tarnua, Abernethie, and Hallhill, the fishing of Spey, Lossy, and Findhorn. He had likewise the administration of the earldoms of Marr and Orkney, the lordship of Shetland, and bailiery of Strathdee. In the Queen

<sup>1</sup> [“This Earle George did build the house of The Boig of Geigh, hard vpoun the river of Spey, and finished the house of Strathbie verie statelie and sumptuouslie, which his father Earle Alexander had begun. He erected also the church of Kingusie, in Badzenoch, and Sanct Peter his chappell, at Elgyn of Murray.” (Sir Robert Gordon's Genealogical History of the Earldom of Sutherland, p. 82.) In the charter room at Floors Castle there is a charter by George Earl of Huntly, dated “apud le Geych”, on the twenty fourth of May 1481, confirming a charter granted by James Innes of That Ilk to William Meldrum of Fyvie, of the lands of Bogmothill in the lordship of Boyne, and the shire of Banff.]

Regent's tour to the north, he entertained her so sumptuously, that (says Straloch) Monsieur D'Osé advised her to humble him: and, in M.D.LIV., he was divested of his said acquisitions, and rebelling against Queen Mary, lost his life in the battle of Corrichee, anno M.D.LXII. Brevity only allows me to mention his son (15) George; whose son (16) George, caused murder the Earl of Moray in Dunibrisle, anno M.D.XCII., fought the battle of Glenlivat, M.D.XCIV., was created Marquis on the seventeenth of April M.D.XCIX., and died M.DC.XXXVI. His son (17) George was beheaded in M.DC.XLIX.; whose son (18) Lewis died M.DC.LIII., and was father of (19) Duke George.

In M.DC.L., the family of Huntly was addebted to Argyle, a million of merks Scots; and the judicial rent of Huntly's estate was fifty thousand merks, whereof ten thousand annually were allowed to the Marchioness dowager and the Earl of Aboyne (vide Argyle's Tryal.) And Lord Lorn lived in Gordon Castle from M.DC.LIII. to the first of February M.DC.LXI. The family of Huntly was saved from being sunk under this debt by Argyle's forfeiture in M.DC.LXI., when the King remitted the whole of it. George was created Duke of Gordon on the first of November M.DC.LXXXIV. His son (20) Alexander. His son (21) Cosmo-George. And his son (22) Alexander is now Duke. And thus the noble family has flourished during two and twenty generations.

THE PARISH OF BOCHARM (OR ARTENDOL) WITH PART OF DUNDURCAS.

BOHARM PARISH.<sup>2</sup> (A.D. M.DCC.LXXV.)

HE parish of Boharm, antiently and truly written, Bocharn; for over against the plains of Rothes, and on the east bank of the river, is a high hill called Ben-eggin, id est, the hill with clefts; and round a great part of the hill this parish windeth: hence called Bocharn, id est, a bow or arch about the carn or hill.<sup>3</sup> It is in length about four miles, and in few places above half a mile in breadth, lying on the east side of a brook that runneth into the water of Fiddich.

The church standeth on the south side of the hill, two miles west of Botrifnie, two miles north-east of Aberlaure, two miles and a half south-east of Rothes, and

<sup>1</sup> [“The number of presbyterian ministers in the diocese of Moray was so small, that they made but one presbytery, called ‘The Presbytery of Moray,’ till the year 1702. Before this year they had no meeting of synod; but in March, 1702, the commission of the assembly recommended to them to meet in synod. In pursuance of which, in a meeting at Forres, on the twenty-third of June, 1702, they erected themselves into three presbyteries, videlicet, The united presbytery of Inverness and Forres; The united presbytery of Elgin, Aberlaure, and Abernethie; and The presbytery of Strathboggie. In October, the same year, they met in synod for the first time. The number of ministers soon increasing, by the demise of the episcopal incumbents, Aberlaure and Abernethie were disjoined from Elgin anno 1707, and made a distinct presbytery. In 1708, Inverness and Forres became two presbyteries; and in 1709, Aberlaure and Abernethie were disjoined, and made two presbyteries.” (Shaw’s History of the Province of Moray, pp. 303, 304.)]

<sup>3</sup> [“As this description is only partially applicable, the old parish containing only one-half of the bow, one is inclined to seek another derivation, and to suppose that the Castle of Bucharm took its name from its own situation, and bestowed it on the parish. It stood on the point where the brook Altarn, now Aldernie, id est, the burn of alders, flows into the Fiddich, which just at that point takes a very singular turn in its course. Hence, perhaps, Bucharn, or the head of the alder stream, for the name of the castle, and so from the castle to the parish.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii., p. 356. Edinb. 1842.)]

about three miles north of Mortlich. Boharm was a parsonage, whereof the Earl Fife is patron. Ardintullie (called antiently Artendol) was the original parish;<sup>1</sup> and Boharm, (properly Bocharn) was only the chapel of Moray, laird of Boharn. At Galival are the vestiges of a domestic chapel; and probably there was a chapel of ease where the church now stands. There is a glebe at Ardintullie, and another at Boharm. The stipend is thirty-two bolls meal, and six hundred merks, with twenty merks for communion elements. The school salary is not legal: the catechisable persons, six hundred. The protestant ministers are Mr. William Rothie, reader in Ardintullie, M.D.LXIX.; George Frazer, minister before, M.DC.XXIV., died about M.DC.XXVIII.; Alexander Anderson, ordained about M.DC.XXIX., transported in M.DC.XXXIII.; Thomas Law, ordained in M.DC.XXIV., transported to Elgin in M.DC.XLV.; George Dunbar, ordained in M.DC.XLVII., died in M.DC.L.; William Harper, ordained in M.DC.LV., died in M.DC.LXXXV.; Adam Harper, ordained in M.DC.LXXXVI., demitted in M.DCC.XVI.; George Gordon, ordained on the thirteenth of May, M.DCC.XVII., transported to Alves in M.DCC.XXVIII.; John Gilchrist, ordained in M.DCC.XXIX., transported to Urquhart in M.DCC.XXIV.; George Grant, ordained in M.DCC.XXIV., transported to Rathven in M.DCC.LII.; Thomas Johnston, from Glenbucket, admitted on the thirty-first of May, M.DCC.LIII.

This parish (all in the county of Banff) was, in the reign of King William the Lion, about anno M.CC.X., the property of William Moray, son of William, and

<sup>1</sup> [“The church of the parish of Arndilly, in early times called Artendol, stood on the eminence which is now the site of the mansion-house of Arndilly, on the banks of the Spey, in the south-west corner of the present parish. Vestiges of such ecclesiastical occupation of this lovely spot remained till within the memory of man, the ruins of the church being cleared away to make room for part of the offices of the mansion-house, and an equivalent being then given for the glebe, which now forms part of the lawn. It is conjectured that the church at Arndilly having been allowed to go to ruin, perhaps even before the reformation, the chapel of the Castle of Bucharm, in a much more convenient situation, became the place of worship for the whole district, and gave name to the parish. In the year 1788, the parish of Dundurcos, lying due north from Boharm, on both sides of the Spey, was suppressed, and the part of it which lay to the east of the river was annexed to Boharm, except one small property, Aikenway, which, with the lands on the west side of the river, was annexed to Rothes. This annexation added to Boharm upwards of a third, both in extent of surface, and in the number of the population. The old parish is in the county of Banff: the annexation, excepting a small fragment in Banffshire, is in the county of Elgin. A stone, which was in the wall of the old church at Arndilly, is now built into the wall of one of the wings of the mansion-house. It has rude figures carved on it. Another stone, having very nearly the same figures upon it, was taken out of the foundation of the old church of Inveravon; and a third is built into the wall of the Abbey of Deer.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii., pp. 355, 356, 364.) See also The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xvii., p. 364. Edin. 1796.]

grandson of Freskyn Moray of Duffus. He is designed dominus de Petty, Brachlie, Bocharin, etc. (Cartularium Moraviense.) And from his son Walter, descended Sir Andrew Moray, lord Bothwell. "Willelmus filius Willelmi Freskin," had his castle and seat in Boharm, probably at Galival, where some vestiges do still remain.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> [“The ruin of the Castle of Gallvall is the only remain of antiquity in the parish. It was built fronting the east, on the north side of the valley, towards the western end, where the declivity hath fallen more gently into an inclined plain, and shot a promontory into the deep defile formed by the course of the stream of Aldermy; snugly sheltered from the northern blast, with an enlivening extent of arable field rising behind; on either side a luxuriant landscape spread westward on the winding banks of the Fiddich. It appears to have been a simple structure, of an hundred and nineteen feet by twenty-four feet within, divided by an internal wall, so as to form two halls on the ground floor; one sixty-five, and the other fifty-four feet in length. The windows were only twenty inches wide, though the walls were eight feet thick. The front and corners were neatly finished with free-stone. The front and gables are now entirely broken down; but, within these fifty years, they stood to the height of several stories. This bulky fabric, on the eastern front, had lower external accommodations. A domestic chapel stood in its own consecrated burying ground (forsaken only in the course of the last sixty years), about fifty yards from the north end of the castle; and, though only twenty-four feet by twelve feet within, must have been the parent of the present parish church, which was erected in the year 1618.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xvii., pp. 363, 364.) “The Castle of Bucharm, now Galval, is an interesting remain, situated on a fine eminence between the brook Aldernie and the Fiddich, having the vale of Balveny stretching out in front; the vale of Boharm to the east; the lower part of the valley of the Fiddich to the west; and a great extent of well cultivated fields and beautiful woodlands all around. Little of the building is now standing. Under a stone in the floor of the oratory of the castle, a silver ring was lately found, having a small shield fixed upon it, which exhibited two martial figures: this is now at Arndilly.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii., pp. 364, 365.)]

“The rivulet Aldernie above mentioned, conveys to the Fiddich the waters of the upper part of the parish; while those of the lower part, uniting where the eastern valley meets with the circular valley, form the Orchill, now called The Burn of Mulben, which thence descending very rapidly to the Spey, which it joins at the place called Boat of Bridge, has cut a very romantic channel for itself in the rocks through which it passes.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii., p. 359.) “The Chartulary of Moray has preserved the memorial of the bridge over Spey at The Boat of Brigg. Part of the foundation of the southern pier still remains. It has been supposed that the bridge was of timber.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xvii., p. 359.) “Both record and tradition inform us, that, in early times, there was a bridge over the Spey, near the influx of the Orchil. It appears to have been chiefly of wood. Where tradition says it crossed the river, the water is very deep close to the rock on the east side, which served for one of the abutments; but this great depth extends but a little way out from the rock, and then the stream shallows to the western bank. Hence one long stretch, not beyond the powers of the largest timber of the country, would suffice for getting over the deeper water; and

At this time, the freeholds are :

Arntullie, the seat of Alexander Grant, of which he purchased the freehold from Sir Ludowick Grant, anno M.DCC.LVII. His father, Thomas of Achoinany and Arntullie, died M.DCC.LVIII., and was son of Walter, son of John of Arntullie, second son of Archibald the first of Bellintom. It is pleasantly situated at the foot of Ben-eggan, on the bank of Spey, and capable of great improvement, by inclosing and planting. This gentleman is likewise proprietor of Galival and of Newton, which lately pertained to a gentleman of the name of Anderson.

To the east of the church are the lands of Achmadies, the property of Sir James Grant.

And thence northward is the barony of Achluncart, which, for several generations, pertained to a branch of the house of Innes, and by an heiress came to a son of Stewart of Tanachie.

This parish is well accommodated with moss ground for fuel, and generally is a rich and fertile soil, very early in ripening about Arntullie, but cold and late on the south-east side of the hill.

then the progress westward would be comparatively easy by means of supports from the bottom; and such, according to tradition, was the nature of the structure. Not a vestige of its ruins has been visible for many years. A ferry boat was substituted for it, and the passage of the river came to be called by the anomalous name of The Boat of Bridge, while the farms in the neighbourhood still retained their former appellations of Bridgetown of Spey and Upper Briglands. The boat has now, in its turn, given place to another bridge erected a few years ago on the same spot. Connected with the ancient structure, and on the Boharm side of the river, there was a religious establishment called The Hospital of St. Nicholas at the Bridge of Spey. The ruins of this establishment remained in considerable extent, till cleared away for the approach to the present bridge, when many human bones were disinterred." Compositio inter Episcopum Moraviensem et . W . de Moravia de Petyn .<sup>1</sup> (A.D. 1226.)

Novent universi hoc scriptum visuri vel audituri quod cum Andreas episcopus Moraviensis convenisset et trahere in causam proposisset Walterum de Moravia filium quondam Willelmi de Moravia . super terris de Ardtrillen . et Lunnin . et Duldaui . et Croyn . quas idem Willelmus detinebat et jure hereditario ad se pertinere dicebat . et super advocatione ecclesiarum de Croyn . Abirlouer . Buthrothyn . et de Arteldol . et super decima cani domini Regis quod idem Rex solebat recipere de Bracholy . Bucharem . Abirlouer . et Kyneremoneh . Ita convenit inter eos amicabiliter consentiente et consulente capitulo Moraviensis ecclesie . scilicet . quod predictus Episcopus quietas clamavit pro se et successoribus suis predicto Waltero et heredibus suis in perpetuum decimas cani predicti et advocationes ecclesiarum de Abirlouer et de Buttruthin in quibus constabat plures predecessorum predicti Walteri usque ad tempora presentia jus presentandi habuisse . Compositionem autem factam inter venerabilem

HE parish of Aberlaure (all in the county of Banff) is called also Skir-Drustan. It extendeth on the bank of Spey, from the mouth of Fiddich, three miles to the south-west; and, on all other sides, is environed with hills, and no where above a mile in breadth, except a small skirt in Glenrinnes.

The church standeth on the bank of the river, where a brook, flowing from the hills towards Mortlich, falleth into it, two miles north-west of Mortlich, two miles near to the west of Boharm, and three miles and a half north-east of Inveravon. At the confluence of Fiddich and Spey, there is a passage boat, and another at the church.

Aberlaure and Skirdrostan (the last dedicated to St. Durstan) were distinct charges; but how early they were united, I find not. In M.DC.XL., Walter Innes of Auchluncart, Adam Duff of Drummuir, and James Sutherland, tutor of Duffus, presented severally to this church; and Duffus's right being examined by the commissaries of Moray and Inverness, and some ministers, was found good (Synod Records). Now, the Earl of Fife acteth as patron; probably as coming in the place of Lord Balvenie. The stipend is eight hundred and fifty merks, with fifty merks for communion elements. The school is not legal. The mortifications are: by Alexander Grant of Alachie, one hundred pounds: by William Innes of Kinermonie, (for which the Earl of Fife pays annually three and a half bolls oatmeal,) three hundred and fifty pounds: by John Proctor, sixty-six pounds, thirteen shillings and fourpence: by Patrick Clark in Boharm, thirty pounds: by Alexander Green, sixty-six pounds, thirteen shillings and fourpence: and by John MacKeran in Glenrinnes, sixty-six pounds, thirteen shillings and fourpence: total, (in Scots money) six hundred and eighty pounds. The catechisable persons are eight hundred and forty. The protestant ministers are : Mr. John Stuart, settled before M.DC.XXIV., died on the first of April, M.DC.XXXIX. : Mr. George Speed, ordained in June, M.DC.XL., died on the twenty-second of August, M.DC.LXVIII. : Mr. Robert Stephen, ordained in summer, M.DC.LXIX., died in December, M.DCC.V. : Mr. Robert Stephen, ordained on the eighteenth of September, M.DCC.VII., transported to Craig of Munross in M.DCC.XIV. : Mr. George Lindsey, from Rothes, admitted in winter, M.DCC.XIV., died in M.DCC.XV. : Mr. Daniel MacKenzie from Kingusie, admitted in December, M.DCC.XV., transported to Inveravon in M.DCC.XVIII. : Mr. Robert Duff, ordained in March, M.DCC.XIX., died in July, M.DCC.XXXVIII. : Mr. John Touch, ordained on the thirty-first of May, M.DCC.XXXIX., transported to Mortlich in M.DCC.LXIII. : Mr. James Thomson, ordained in M.DCC. . . . admitted on the twentieth of February, M.DCC.LXVI. Nota bene: lite pendente, the Duke of Gordon and Earl of Fife agreed to this last settlement, salvo jure.

<sup>1</sup> [“The name of this parish, Skirdustan, is derived from the Gaelic skir, to cut or divide, and Dustan, the name of its tutelary saint, the whole signifying Dustan's division or parish.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xi., p. 110. Edinb. 1836.) “The name of Aberlour parish is derived from its local situation, at the mouth of a noisy burn, where it discharges itself into the Spey.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. iv., p. 64. Edinb. 1792.) “Near the influx of the burn of Aberlour, on the daugh of Allachie, stand the roofless walls of the old church; and about three hundred yards farther to the east, on the same plain, is the new church, erected in the year 1812.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xi., p. 116.)]

The parish is now the property of five heritors.

In the lower end is Mudhouse, a feu pertaining to Mr. Anderson.

Next up the river is the heritage of Gordon of Aberlaure.

Further up the river, and on the south-east of the brook, is Alachie.<sup>1</sup> This was the heritage of Alexander Grant, third son of Bellentom, by whose daughter it came in mortgage to Duff of Keithmore, and was lately redeemed by Sir Ludowick Grant, who, in M.DCC.LVIII., disponed it to James Grant of Caron.

In the face of the hill, south-west from Alachie, is Edinvillie. This was the property of Gordon of Faskine, from whom it came to Grant of Easter Elchies, and now is the property of the Earl of Findlater.

The lands of Mudhouse, Aberlour, Alachie, and Edinvillie, were a part of the lordship of Balvenie ; and the lands of Caron where church lands, and now hold of the family of Gordon.

Below Edinvillie, towards the side of the river, is the barony of Kinermonie. This was a part of the lordship of Balvenie, and was given by Innes of Balvenie to his second son, whose heirs exchanged it for Ortown, and now it is the property of the Earl of Fife.

In the west end of the parish is Carron,<sup>1</sup> at the foot of the hill of that name. It continued above two hundred years, the property of a branch of the family of Grant of Glenmorriston; and colonel John Grant, the last of Carron, being killed before Carthagena, anno M.DCC.XLI., without male issue, Charles Grant of Ringerorum became the male heir. From him captain Lewis Grant of Achterblair, a branch of the Clan Allan (and who married colonel Grant's eldest daughter), purchased his right; and now captain James Grant, his son, enjoyeth it, and in M.DCC.LXVII., was made baron of Mulderie, in the county of Moray.

THE PARISH OF INVERAVEN (OR STRATHAW'N.)

ERE I must trace the rivers of Avon and Livat that water this parish.

The river Avon riseth out of a lake of that name, about two miles in length, situated in a deep valley, between two of the highest hills in the kingdom, videlicet Cairn-gorm and Cairn-gorm-beg; and running through Glenavon, and the parishes of Kirkmichael and Inveravon, it emptieth into Spey at Ballendalloch, after a course of about twenty miles.

About three miles above the mouth of Avon, Livat falleth into it, which, rising in the hills towards Strathdon, watereth Glenlivat for seven or eight miles, and mixeth with Avon at Drummin.

Both these waters are very impetuous; and Avon is so clear and deceiving, that, where to the eye it appeareth but a foot deep, it is commonly more than three feet.<sup>2</sup>

This parish is very extensive, running on the bank of Spey, from north-east to south-west, above three and a half miles, and then south-south-east above eight miles.

The church standeth on the bank of Spey, a furlong east from the mouth of Avon, three and a half miles south-west of Aberlaure, two miles south of Knockando, six miles north-east of Cromdale, and as many north of Kirkmichael. It was a parsonage dedicated to Saint Peter, and was the seat of the chancellor of the diocese; and the vicarages of Knockando, and Urquhart, beyond Inverness, depended on it. The laird of Grant is patron. Mr. William Coggie, being transported to Inverness, retained the revenues of the chancellory till the synod in M.DC.XXIV. obliged him to demit them. There was a chapel of ease in the south-west corner, called Kil-Machlie, and two in Glenlivat, ridelicet, at Daskie and at Dunan.<sup>1</sup> The stipend, by a decree in M.DC.LXXXV. was eight hundred and thirty merks, with thirty-six merks for element money; but, anno M.DCC.LXIX., an augmentation was obtained of sixteen pounds Scots, and three chalders of meal valued at six pounds Scots per boll. The mortifications for the poor are its uncommon transparency, which makes it dangerous for strangers to attempt fording, being often many feet deep where it scarcely appears to be two; and hence the doggerel lines

The water of Aven so fair and clear,
Would deceive a man of a hundred year."

(The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xi., p. 126. Edinb. 1836. See also The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xiii., pp. 425, 426. Edinb. 1794.)

<sup>1</sup> [“Besides the churchyard of the parish, there are two other burying places, one upon the east side of Livet, near four miles from the parish church, near the walls of the old chapel of Dounan; and another, almost five miles higher up the glen, on the west side of Cromby, and opposite to The Bochle. It is called The Buitterlach, and was consecrated more than forty years ago, by two popish bishops, to be a burying ground for the catholics; but few are yet buried in it. There was in old time also a chapel and burying place on the east side of Livet, about half a mile above the protestant meeting house, called Chapel Christ; but very little remains of the chapel are to be seen, and the burying ground has been washed away by a small rivulet which runs between it and Nevie, and by the water of Livet. There was also once a chapel and burying ground on the west side of Aven, on the estate of Kilmachlie, almost opposite to the mouth of Livet, on a farm which is from it called Chapeltown. There are evident marks of graves with stones set up at the heads of some of them; and hard by is an excellent spring, which emits a large stream of water.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xiii., pp. 36, 37. Edinb. 1794.) “There were chapels at Phona, at Nevie, Deskie, and Chapelton of Kilmaichlie; but no traces now remain of any of them except the latter, the outlines of which are still visible, with some appearances of graves close by. The burial ground of Downan is still used, and occasionally also that of Buitterlach; in the near neighbourhood of which there is a very large cairn supposed to be raised over the grave of a person of note. A small spot, in a field on the farm of Haughs of Kilmaichlie, appears clearly to have been also a place of sepulture. In the immediate neighbourhood of the old chapel at Chapelton of Kilmaichlie is a very copious spring of water, cased with stones, indicating perhaps that it was in repute in times of old.” (The New Statistical Account, number xi., pp. 133, 125.)]

seven hundred merks. The school is legal. The catechiseable persons are sixteen hundred and sixty; whereof about five hundred are Roman Catholics. The Protestant ministers are: Mr. William Coggie, settled before M.DC.X., transported to Inverness about M.DC.XX.: Mr. Alexander Innes, ordained about M.DC.XXII., transported to Rothemay about M.DC.XXX.: Mr. John Chalmers, ordained about M.DC.XXXI., transported to Gartlie in M.DC.XLIX.: Mr. Alexander Gordon, ordained in M.DC.L., deposed for immorality in M.DC.LVII.: Mr. George Hannay (ordained minister at Alves on the twelfth of November, M.DC.XL deposited in M.DC.XLVI., for opposing the covenant,) admitted in M.DC.LVIII., transported to Aldern in M.DC.LXIV.: Mr. Alexander Dunbar, ordained in M.DC.LXV., transported in M.DC.LXVIII.: Mr. James Stuart, ordained on the twenty-second of September, M.DC.LXIX., demitted in M.DC.LXXXI. on account of the test: Mr. John Stuart, ordained in summer M.DC.LXXXII., died in M.DC.XCVII.: Mr. James Bannerman, ordained on the fifteenth of April, M.DCC.III., transported to Forglen in M.DCC.XVII.: Mr. Daniel MacKenzie, from Aberlaure, admitted in M.DCC.XVIII., transported to Pettie in M.DCC.XIX.: Mr. Alexander Fraser, from Alvie, admitted on the twenty-first of September, M.DCC.XXI., died on the thirteenth of February, M.DCC.LII.: Mr. James Grant, ordained in M.DCC.LI., admitted on the twenty-third of November, M.DCC.LII.

Malcolm, Earl of Fife, gave this church, and a davach of land in Inveravon, to the Bishop of Moray; which sheweth that this was once a part of the estate of the Earls of Fife, and probably came to the Grants by the favour of Robert Steuart, Duke of Albany, (uncle to Andrew Steuart, who married the heiress of Grant,) to whom Isabel MacDuff, the heiress, disponed that great estate.

The whole lower end of the parish (except Coulchoich, pertaining to the Duke of Gordon) is the barony of Ballindalach. This, for above two hundred years, was a part of the estate of the old family of Ballindalach, of whom Advie, Della, Dalvey, Tommavulin, etc., have descended. But being evicted and brought to a sale, it was purchased by the laird of Grant in the beginning of this century, and given by the brigadier with his sister to colonel William Grant, second son to Rothimurchus, whose son James (since the death of his nephew William, son of his elder brother Alexander, without issue) now possessth it, and has a beautiful seat at the confluence of Spey and Avon.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> ["The house of Ballindalloch, a large structure, consists of a square building, flanked by three circular towers; the centre tower, which is the largest, containing the ancient door and turnpike stair, surmounted by a square watch-tower termed 'the cape house,' with a window to each of the four sides, and an aperture in the wall immediately above the entrance, so as to admit of boiling lead, or missiles, being thrown down in the event of an enemy making good his approach. Over the chimney in one of the rooms is carved the date 1546. The 'cape house' seems to have been added by Patrick Grant in the year 1602;

Three miles above Ballindalach, upon the same side of Avon, beginneth Glenlivat,<sup>1</sup> which runneth up south-east on both sides of Livat five miles, and holdeth of the Duke of Gordon, either in property or superiority.

In the face of Benrinnes, on the north side of Livat, is Morinsh, for several generations the property of Laird of Morinsh, but now a part of the estate of Ballindalach.

On the west side of Avon, for three miles from the mouth of it, lieth the barony of Kilmachlie. This was a part of the estate of Alexander Steuart, (fourth son of King Robert II.), Earl of Buchan, and Lord Badenoch and Strath-

and, about the beginning of the last century, a further addition was made of two large and commodious wings. The building is situated a little to the east of the Aven, and about half a mile from its confluence with the Spey, upon a low flat haugh richly wooded. A little farther up the river, upon the edge of the high ground, and near a small stream called ‘the castle stripe,’ are to be seen the traces of a large building, said to have been the old castle or mansion house of Ballindalloch; where, tradition says, it would have still stood, had not the rebuilding been prevented by unseen agency, the part built in the day time having been always thrown down through the night: at length a voice was heard saying ‘Build in the cow haugh, and you shall meet with no interruption.’ The recommendation was followed, and the house of Ballindalloch was built where it now stands.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xi., pp. 133, 134.)

“Carta feodifirme ab Episcopo Moraviensi cum consensu capituli concessa Johanni Grant de Ballandallacht et nobili mulieri Barbarae Gordoun ejus sponsae et heredibus masculis dicti Johanniss; quibus deficientibus Jacobo Grant de Fruychy et heredibus suis masculis; terrarum de Kirktoone de Inverawn in vicecomitatu de Banff: Reddendo inde annuatim quatuor marcas: Testibus Alexandro Gordoune de Strathown, Arthuro Stewart de Kynimachlo, Patricio Grant de Dalwey, Jacobo Grant de Desk, Willelmo Gordoune: Apud Drummyn, 18 Julii 1544.” (Registrum Episcopatus Moraviensis, p. 408.) “Preceptum sasine earundem terrarum: Testibus ut supra, una cum Willelmo Hay: Apud Drummyn, 21 Julii 1545.” (Ibid.) See also pp. 391, 392, 398, 399.]

<sup>1</sup> [“About a mile from the confluence of Aven and Livet, the rivulet Tervy falls into Livet. From the mouth of Tervy, up Livet about half a mile, lies Achbrake; and at the distance of half a mile eastward from Achbrake, the burn of Altachoylnachan falls into Tervy; and about a mile and a half almost up this burn and south-east from its mouth, the battle of Altachoylnachan, in October, 1594, was fought between Huntly and Argyle, in which the latter was defeated.” (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xiii., p. 35.) “The battle of Altachoylnachan, or Glenlivet, was fought on the fourth of October, 1594, upon an inclined plain near the Benrinnes border of the parish, terminating in a flat ridge which descends rapidly to the burn of Altachoylnachan, and flanked on the south by a somewhat precipitous shoulder of the contiguous mountain. About three quarters of a mile from the scene of action, a small knoll on the east bank of the stream Coualt, commonly called Lord Auchindown’s cairn, two-thirds of it swept away by the flood of 1829, marks the place where Sir Patrick Gordon of Auchindown is supposed to have died.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xi., p. 130.)]

avon ; who, having no legitimate issue, gave the lands of Strathavon to his bastard son, Sir Andrew ; whose son, Sir Walter, sold Strathavon to the family of Gordon : or, rather, it came to Thomas, bastard son of Alexander Steuart, Earl of Marr, who was bastard son of the Earl of Buchan ; and Thomas sold it to Alexander, Earl of Huntly. But Kilmachlie continued with a son of Sir Andrew and his descendants,<sup>1</sup> until Ludovick laird of Grant, purchased it ; and now it is a part of the estate of Ballindalach.<sup>2</sup>

On the point where Avon and Livat join, stands the castle of Drummin<sup>3</sup> which was the seat of the barons of Strathavon, and is now the residence of Charles Steuart of Drummin, a branch of Kilmachlie. Here there is an arch of a stone-bridge over Livat.

This parish is accommodated with much wood, rich pasture ground, and plentiful salmon fishing.

The barony of Ballindalach is in the county of Moray : the rest is in Banffshire.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>2</sup> [“A clump of venerable firs, one of them measuring eleven feet in circumference at eleven feet from the ground, and supposed to contain two hundred and twelve cubic feet of timber, heightens the natural beauty of the ancient place of Kilmaichlie, which, with the old widow lady who inhabited it, and some of her domestics, is so interestingly described in the eighty-seventh number of ‘The Lounger,’ by the graphic pen of the ‘Man of Feeling.’” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xi., p. 129.)]

<sup>3</sup> [“At Blairfindy, are to be seen the ruins of a hunting seat of the Earls of Huntly : and at Drumin, on a high promontory near the confluence of the Livet with the Aven, stands part of the old castle of Drumin, now affording shelter only to jackdaws and pigeons. The wall, which is of great height and thickness, is pretty entire on the east and north, and half of the west side ; but the other half of the west and the whole south wall are gone, and the stability of a considerable part of what remains of the structure segms to rest on a single stone of a few inches in diameter.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xi. p. 133.)]

<sup>4</sup> [“There were upon an eminence on the east side of Aven, and a short way up from the house of Ballendalloch, a few long stones enclosing a small piece of ground, which was said to be a Druidical temple. The most of the stones have been taken away, except one very broad, thick, and long stone, which stands still there. Opposite to this, on the west

ACCOUNT OF THE COUNTRY OF STRATHSPEY.<sup>1</sup> (circa A.D. M.DC.LXXX.)

Through this country runneth the famous river Spey, omnium Scotiae fluminum rapidissimum.<sup>2</sup> It taketh its beginning at a great craig called Craig Ilachie, which divideth this country from Badenoch.

This word Craig Ilachie is the laird of Grants slugan: whenever the word is Craig Ilachie, cryed through this country, all the inhabitants are obliged, under a great fine or mullet, to rise in arms and repair themselves to a meeting place in the middest of the country, lying on the river side, called Bellintone, and their to receive the lairds commands.

Upon the south side of the river, opposite to Craig Ilachie, lyeth the parish of Rothemurcus. Rothemurcus, which contains six dauchs of land, each dauch being four ploughs. This parish is in a crook, and a pendicle of the parish of Duthell. It holds of the regality of Spynie: it belongs to Patrick Grant, a cadet of Grants family; but formerly it did belong to the Schaws, who yet possess the parish, Alexander <sup>The Schaws.</sup> Schaw of Dell being the head of the tribe. The Schaws are able fighting men, and acknowledge MacIntosh to be their chieftain, and go under his banner. The Schaws killed the Cumins that dwelt here, who built a castle in the middest of a great loch called Loch Iland. This castle is useful to the country, in time of Loch Iland, troubles or wars; for the people put in their goods and children here, and it is with the castle easily defended, being environed with steep hills and craigs on each side, except thereof towards the east. There is, in the body of the parish, a great firr wood of two miles of length, but very broad in respect it runneth up into many burns. Here <sup>A firr wood,</sup> is a saw mill, a great forest with deer and roe, which marcheth with the forest of Marr to the south.

Upon the north side of the river, opposite to Rothemurcus, beginning at Craig Duthell. Ilachie, lyeth the parish of Duthell, or lordship of Glenchernick, which formerly belonged to the Cumins, but now to the laird of Grant, having married Beglit side of Aven, upon a rising ground amidst the corn land of Bellaviller, is such another place, where several long broad stones encompass about seventy-two square yards of ground: some of the long stones are broken, but several of them still stand whole. Such another temple there is in the lower end of Glenlivet, on the east side of Aven, upon a hillock, or small rising ground, a little below the mouth of Livet, called The Doun of Dilmore." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xiii., pp. 42, 43.) "Rude stone coffins have occasionally been discovered in the parish, under cairns removed to make way for the plough; and in trenching a wood on the farm of Kilmaichlie, the labourers found some old arms and coins. Numerous traces of Druidical temples are to be found." (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xi., pp. 132, 133.)]

Cumin, heir to lord Alexander Cumin, by whom he got this estate. This parish and parsonage is within the diocese of Murray, and sheriffdom thereof. It runneth Dullan water. five miles under the hills, from Craig Ilachie till ye come to the water of Dullan. This water is on both sides habitable, of ten miles of length, being a pleasant water, good corn land, excellent meadows, good pasturage on both sides. There comes no salmon in this water, but extraordinary much kipper, that is salmon in Kipper. the forbidden time, which are in such abundance that a gentleman thinks nothing to kill two hundred and sixty in a night. They use to feast the sheriff and to escape the fine; but the commonalty pay some little thing. About the middle of the Firr woods. water, and at the head thereof, there are great firr woods on both sides, replenished with deer and roe: much timber from thence transported to Inverness. There is here two miles mounth, which divideth this countrey from Strath Earn to the north-west, called Kairne Lair Bane.

Duthell kirk. About the middle of the riwer standeth the kirk of Duthell, a large church, but a poor provision, as all the churches of this countrey of Strathspey have, not exceeding five hundred merks Scots for each minister, who serveth at two churches, and some of them having seven miles between their kirks; and in the Bands of the whole world there are not worse paid ministers, and more neglected. The bands kirk doors. of the kirk doors are very rare, made after the manner of a tree casting out its branches, and covering the whole door after the manner of needlework.

Gentlemens houses. There are several gentlemens houses here of the name of Grant, given to hospitality and frugality. The chief family here is that of the Clan Donichie, Mr. James Grant of Delvers, advocate, being the head of their tribe. The women here are virtuous, much given to the making of cloth, by which they yearly enrich their husbands with money.

The foot of the water of Dullan, standeth the castle of Muckrach, belonging to the laird of Grant.

The Leanach. From Duthell eastwards there is a great Forrest belonging to His Majesty, called The Leanach, which formerly was well replenished with deer and roe, but much neglected by reason that they pasture much cattel there, which brings in money to the laird of Calder, who is forester.

Lochin Dirb. In this mounth is the famous loch called Lochin Dirb, two miles in length, with its castle. where there is a castle that has been very great: one of the Cumins strengths. Here the Cumins lady was besieged by King Robert Bruce, the sconses being yet extant, till Edward Langshanks came and raised the siege.

The mounth. This mounth on the south hath Strathspey, on the north Strath Earn, on the east Bray Moray, being very long. In the narrowest part it is eight miles of breadth, and runneth till it come to Lochaber, forty miles.

Opposite to the parish of Duthell, that part of it which lyeth on the river Spey, on the other side of the river, lyeth the parish of Kincharden, anciently possessed Kincharden. by the Stewarts, who had their charter from King Robert Bruce, but, being wrested from them by Conadge, it now belongeth to Huntly.

Above this parish lyeth The Glenmore, where is a great firr wood, with much Glen More. birch. Here is a great loch, out of which runneth a water which runneth through Rothemurcus, called Druie, and runneth into the Spey. They use to bring down their timber on this water. Here is the famous hill called Kairne Gorum, which Kairne Gorum. is four miles high. Here, it is said, there are minerals ; for gold hath been found Minerals. here. This hill aboundeth with excellent crystall : much deer and roe here. The Chrystall. people of this parish much neglect labouring, being addicted to the wood, which Deer and roe. leaves them poor. There is much talking of a spirit, called Ly Erg, that frequents Ly Erg. The Glenmore. He appears with a red hand, in the habit of a souldier, and challenges men to fight with him ; as lately in the year sixty-nine he fought with three brothers, one after another, who immediately dyed thereafter.<sup>1</sup>

Opposite to Kincharden lyeth the parish of Inver Ellon, belonging to the laird of Inver Ellon. Grant. The chief family here is that of the Clan Phadrike ; Tullochcorume being the head of that tribe, of the name of Grant. In old there frequented this family a spirit called Meg Mulloch.<sup>1</sup> It appeared like a little boy ; and in dark nights Meg Mulloch. would hold a candle before the goodman, and show him the way home ; and if the goodwife would not come to bed, it would cast her in beyond him ; and if she refused to bring what he desired, it would cast it before him. Excellent corns here.

Opposite to Inver Ellon lyeth the parish of Abernethie. Here is a great firr Abernethie. wood, twenty four miles in compass, belonging to Grant, with an old castle, built by the Red Friars. The chief family here is that of the Clan Allan ; Achernick being the head of that family. Excellent meadows here on the river side, and good corn land. Several good gentlemens houses, given to hospitality, on the water of Nethie, which runneth through the parish. This water aboundeth with kipper.

Beneath Abernethie, lyeth the parish of Cromdell. The lands here in ancient Cromdell.

<sup>1</sup> [“Apparitions were everywhere talked of and believed. Particular families were said to be haunted by certain demons, the good or bad geniuses of these families : such as, on Speyside, the family of Rothemurchus, by Bodach an Dun, id est, the ghost of the dune ; the baron of Kinchardine’s family, by Red Hand, or a ghost one of whose hands was blood red ; Gartinbeg, by Bodach Gartin ; Glenlochie, by Brownie ; Tullochgorm, by Maag Moulach, id est, one with the left hand all over hairy. I find in the synod records of Moray frequent orders to the presbyteries of Aberlaure and Abernethie to enquire into the truth of Maag Moulach’s appearing ; but they could make no discovery, only that one or two men declared that they once saw, in the evening, a young girl whose left hand was all hairy, and who instantly disappeared.” (Shaw’s History of the Province of Moray, p. 306.) See also Sir Walter Scott’s Marmion, cant. iv., st. xxii., and note.]

Bella castle. times belonged to the Nairns, but now to Grant. This parish is exceeding good land, and lyeth on both sides of the river. Much salmon taken here. Here is Bella castle, the lairds chief residence, a stately house, with parks about the same: great grassings.

Beneath Cromdell, on the south side, lyeth the house and land of Delvey, in a crook of the river. Good land, etc. And next thereto lyeth the land of Advi. Bellindalloch. Next to it is the water of Aven, whereon standeth the castle of Bellindalloch. This water of Aven hath woods on both sides; and four miles above this castle Glenlivet. the water divideth into two, the one half coming through Glenlivet, an excellent countrey for corns and pasturage; and it lyeth towards the south-east, where are the castles of Blairphine and Drummine. Towards the south-west lyeth the countrey Strathdown. of Strathdown: a good high countrey for corns, pasturage, woods, deer, and roe. The people here are more rude than in any other place or water side that runneth into Spey. Generally, both in this countrey and Glenlivet, they have fallen to popery. The countreys abound with all necessaries for the use of man: they are within Bamffshire.

Inver Aven. Inver Aven. On the south side of the river lyeth the church of Inver Aven, being the chancellour seat of Murray. This parish is within Bamffshire, and diocese of Murray.

Knockando. Knockando. Opposite to it is the parish of Knockando, belonging to the laird of Grant. It is five miles of length on the north side of the river, being good land; and a great mounth that divideth it from Murray land. There are several gentlemens houses here: the people civil. Here endeth the Irish language.

The church of St. Peter of Strathouen was erected into a prebend of the cathedral church of the Holy Trinity at Spyney, by Bricius bishop of Murray, between the year 1203 and the year 1214: “quinta canonica ecclesia Sancti Petri de Strathouen cum capellis suis et una dauacha terre et cum aliis justis pertinentiis suis . et ecclesia de Hurchard ultra Inuernys cum omnibus justis pertinentiis suis .” (Registrum Episcopatus Moraviensis, pp. 40—43.) The erection was confirmed by Pope Innocent III. on the twenty-second of December, 1214. (Id. pp. 43, 44.) By the constitutions of Bishop Andrew de Moravia, enacted in a synod of his clergy held at Elgin in the church of St. Giles the Abbot, on the fifth of May 1226, the prebend of Strathouen was assigned to the chancellor of the diocese: “ita tamen ut prebenda de Strathouen juxta quod de consilio et consensu capituli nostri est provisum et statutum sit perpetua canonica ad cancellariam pertinens .” (Id. pp. 73—76, 90—94.) ## IN THE PRESBYTERY OF ABERNETHY.

THE PARISH OF KIRKMICHAEL.

HIS parish is in the shire of Banff. This glen and strath was a part of the estate of M'Duff Earl of Fife in the thirteenth century ; and was, anno M.CCC.LXXXIX., June xxii., resigned by Isabel M'Duff, heiress, in the hands of King Robert III. in perpetuam remanentiam. (Skene de Verborum Significatione, titulo Arage.) It came afterwards to Alexander Lord Badenoch and Earl of Buchan, who left issue only three bastard sons, videlicet, Alexander (Earl of Marr in right of his wife), Sir Andrew of Sandhaugh, and Walter of Kinchardin. Sir Walter of Strathavon (son of Sir Andrew) sold Strathavon, except Kilmachlie and Drummin, to Alexander Earl of Huntly, who disposed it to his son Alexander, and he ex-cambed it for the barony of Clunie. Again, George Earl of Huntley, who died anno M.D.LXXVI., gave Strathavon to his son Alexander, whose son, Alexander Gordon of Dunkintie, sold Strathavon to his cousin George Earl of Huntley. Since that time, all this parish (except the davack of Delnaboe) holds of Huntley in property or superiority.<sup>2</sup>

It is all environed with hills, except a small opening towards Inveravon, and extends in length, on both sides of the river, from north-east to south-west, seven miles : and, about the middle of the parish, the rivulet Conglas (which riseth in the hills towards the river Don), after a course of seven or eight miles, falleth into Avon ; and here the breadth of the parish is three miles.

The church standeth on the east bank of Avon, two miles above the lower end of the parish, six miles south-west of Inveravon, four miles east of Cromdale, and five miles east-north-east of Abernethie. It was a parsonage dedicated to Michael the Archangel.<sup>3</sup> The laird of Grant is patron. At Camdale, in the upper end of the parish, was a chapel of ease, dedicated to St. Brigida or Bryde. The stipend is eight hundred merks, and fifty merks for communion elements. There is no legal school. The examinable persons are about a thousand, whereof two hundred are Roman Catholicks. The Protestant ministers are: Mr. Peter Grant, minister at Kirk-Michael and Cromdale about M.DC.: Mr. John Ray succeeded, and was transported to Dundurcos in M.DC.LI.: Mr. Alexander Gordon, ordained in M.DC.LI., died in M.DC.LXXXIV.: Mr. Colin Nicholson, from Abernethie, admitted in M.DC.LXXXV., died on the twenty-fifth of September, M.DCC.IX.: Mr. Duncan MacLea, ordained in September, M.DCC.XII., transported to Doul in M.DCC.XVII.: Mr. David Muschet, ordained in M.DCC.XVIII., died in M.DCC.XXIV.: Mr. George Grant, ordained on the twenty-first of September, M.DCC.XXV., died on the twenty-seventh of April, M.DCC.LXXII.: Mr. Robert Farquharson, ordained on the fourth of October, M.DCC.LXXII.

On the west side of the river, at the foot of Cromdale hill, are, from north to south, the lands of Inveraurie, Inverlochie, and Forletter, the property of the Duke of Gordon.

Above these, on the banks of the river, is Delnaboe, for some generations the heritage of a branch of the Clan Allan, but now the property of Sir James Grant of Grant.

Above Delnaboe, on both sides of the river, are Achnahyle, once a mortgage of James Grant, brother to Easter Elchies; Dellavorar, for three generations the wadset of a branch of the M'Gregors; and Gavelack. These, and some other possessions, are now wadsettled by William Gordon, grandson to Glenbucket.

Above Gavelack, Glenavon runneth into the Grampian hills about twelve miles, and is a rich pasture for cattle, and a forrest for red deer.

where now the kirk stands, was anciently dedicated. Near the kirk there is a fountain, once highly celebrated, and anciently dedicated to St. Michael. It now lies neglected, choked with weeds, unhonoured and unfrequented. In better days the winged guardian, under the semblance of a fly, was never absent from his duty. If the matron wished to know the issue of her husband's ailment, or the maiden that of her lover, they visited the well of St. Michael. Every movement of the sympathetic fly was regarded in silent awe; and as he appeared cheerful or dejected the votaries drew their presages." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xii., pp. 425, 464, 485.) "On the summit of a hill called Mealaghaneimb, is a stone called Clachbhan (from clach, a stone, and bean, a woman). On one side it measures twenty feet: on the other side it is lower and of a sloping form. In face of it, two seats have been excavated, resembling that of an armed chair. Till of late, this stone used to be visited by pregnant women, not only of this, but from distant countries, impressed with the belief that, by sitting in these seats, the pains of travail would become easy to them." (Id., p. 429.)]

On the east side of the river, below the church, is Dell : above the church is Ruthven-Camdale, where, in M.DCC.LIV., a bridge of three arches was built over the river on the military road.

Next is Cromdale Bhrid, or Brigida's Camdale.

And on Conglas rivulet are several possessions, particularly Achriachan, which, for about two hundred years, was the inheritance of a branch of the Farquharsons, but is now the property of the Duke of Gordon.

THE PARISH OF ALVATH.

A DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF ALVA. BY MR. WILLIAM OGILVY, A.D.
M.DCC.XXII.<sup>1</sup>

LVA parish bordereth on the south with Marnoch parish; and on the south-east with the parish of Forglen; and on the north-east with Banff.

The church stands half a mile from Deveron water to the eastward; and a myle from the church, to the east-south-east, stands a dwelling, now almost demolished, called Auchinbaidy,<sup>2</sup> of the name of Mortimer, now belonging to Mr. Andrew Hay of Mountblairy; whose dwelling house Mountblairy, stands just on Deveron water, two miles from the church, south-east.

Opposite to the same, standeth a dwelling, called Dunlugus, on the other side of the water of Deveron: a little distance from it, to the east, in the parish of

<sup>2</sup> ["There is on the farm of Auchcnbadie an apparently artificial mound of earth, nearly fifty feet high: it is known by the name of 'The Ha' hill.'"] (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii.. p. 162. Edinb. 1842.)

"Some years ago, a tumulus was opened on the farm of Sandlaw, containing several rudely sculptured vases of baked earth. In a tumulus, on the farm of Boghead, were found several vases of a similar kind, containing ashes: contiguous to this tumulus is a large stone called 'carlin kist.' In digging into a small gravel hillock, near Montblairy, a rude stone case or coffin, about four feet square, was discovered, and, on removing the stone which formed the lid, were found ashes and fragments of calcined bones. In digging graves in the churchyard, several vases containing ashes have been found, but differing from others discovered in the parish, in having handles attached, and in being glazed over with a substance resembling the exterior coating of the coarse earthenware of the present day. On the eastern brow of the Hill of Alvah, is a large cairn, chiefly of small stones and earth, of an elliptical form, covering an area of about twenty falls, and in the centre rising to the height of seven or eight feet. Two smaller cairns are to be seen on the Hill of Tipperty and on the farm of Itlaw. On the farm of Boreldales, there remain four large stones of a Druidical circle; and on the farm of Newton of Montblairy, one large stone marks the site where, a few years ago, stood another circle of much larger dimensions. Some time ago,

Alva, and from Mountblairy, to the south-west, one myle, stands a house, called Rosieburn, belonging to the laird of Bogue, Steuart, on a little burn, in which there is plenty of trouts, called Rosieburn.

From Mountblairy, to the south-east, one mile, is an old dwelling, now ruinous, called Bogue of Mountblairy,<sup>1</sup> near Deveron, to the east, where is also an old chappel. From that, on the same water syde of Deveron, south-east, is a dwelling, called Todlae, lately belonging to the name of Mercer, now to Lord Forglen.

The church standeth near a hill, to the south, called Hill of Alva,<sup>2</sup> and at the head of the parish. The church is two myles from Banff.

a Druidical circle was found under ground, in digging deep into an old garden on the farm of Wardend." (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii., pp. 161, 162.)

The Parson of Rothiemay relates how the wars of the Great Rebellion were foretokened, in the year 1638, by "that visione of an army, seen within four myles of Banfe, upon the Hill of Manderlee," an eminence which lies on the borders of the parishes of Alvah and Aberchirder. (Gordon's History of Scots Affairs, from MDCXXXVII. to MDCXL., vol. i., p. 58.) Similar visions, it is yet told by the neighbourhood, preceded the battle of Culloden.

<sup>1</sup> ["At the farm of Bog of Mountblaire are the remains of an old castle, situated in a swamp now overgrown with alder, and said to have been built by the Earl of Buchan; and on the eminence above it are the ruins of a chapel, adjoining to which is a well, famed of old for its sovereign charms, but now fallen into disrepute. Within these few years there was an iron ladle beside it; and many still alive remember to have seen the impending boughs adorned with rags of linen and woollen garments, and the cistern enriched with farthings and bodies, the offerings of those who came from afar to the fountain." (The Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. iv., p. 399. Edinb. 1792.) "The ruins of the ancient castle which once stood near Montblairy are now levelled with the ground; and the swamp on which it stood has become a fruitful field." (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxviii., p. 162.)]

' Erigit ad nubes hic se mons Alvius ingens,
Ostentatque procul conspicienda juga:
Hic quoque templo Dedit surgunt in monte locata
Sublimi; surgit Pieridumque domus.'

At the foot of the hill, towards the north, is a spring which passes by the name of Com's, or Colm's Well, in honour, very probably, of the renowned saint of Icolmkill." greatly impoverished by the ravages of war. The monks become bound on their part to cause the cure of souls in the parish to be served by a perpetual vicar, who should be nominated by them and admitted by the Bishop, receiving a yearly pension from the convent of ten pounds sterling, and being provided with a toft, a croft, and a manse, beside the church, and with pasture for his cattle, according to the approved custom of the diocese. The monastery farther undertook to make payment yearly of six merks to a chaplain serving in the cathedral church of Saint Machar at Aberdeen, who should be nominated and admitted to his office by the dean and chapter, the convent building a manse for his residence, and finding him a decent vestment for service in the choir. THE PARISH OF FORGUE.<sup>1</sup>A DESCRIPTION OF THE PARISH OF FORGUE.<sup>2</sup> (A.D. M.DCC.LXI.)

ORGUE lies in the north part of the county of Aberdeen, about twenty-four miles from the head burgh, having part of Rothemay and Inverkeithny parishes, Banffshire, to the north ; Inverkeithny and Auchterless, to the east ; Auchterless and Culsamond, to the south ; Inch, Drumblade, and Kinnoir, or Huntly, to the west.

It is of an irregular form, but among the largest and most populous in the county. From the ford of Auchentender, at the south or south-west, to the muir of Turtry, at the north, is six computed miles ; and from the west of Auchterless, near the Lentchy, to Begg's Hill burn, four miles in breadth ; the circumference of the whole, taking the course of its march with other parishes, being twenty-four miles.

It may be divided in two parts ; that is, hilly, or what the country people term muir-tacks, and the low-land, or more improven grounds. The first consists of towns and farms, among, and upon the skirts of the Foudland hills, and the last, those in the north of the parish, and upon the burn sides.

There are not many high hills in the parish, although several small ones with glens or little valleys interspersed. The Fore or Fowrman hill,<sup>3</sup> in the north-west, which separates Forgue from Kinnoir and Rothemay, is the most considerable, is seen from the German Ocean and Murray Frith, and, in many places, at the distance of thirty miles ; its summit, or top, appearing almost like a riding saddle, from the east and west. The hills of Raich, Culyne, and Aschaloch, or Frendraught, run in a ridge betwixt the burns of Forgue and Frendraught, through the middle of the parish, from north-east to south-west. Those of Aucharnys, Auchabors, Cranloch, Glenmellin, etc., are all parts of the Foudland, though they are known by different names, as are the hills of Munelly and Drum-dollo : those of Bogny are part of the Foreman.

<sup>3</sup> [“ The unfortunate Mary Queen of Scots, on her journey to the north [in 1562], passed over this hill on her way to Rothemay, by what goes still by the name of The Queen’s Road.” (The New Statistical Account of Scotland, number xxxix., p. 599. Edinb. 1842.)]

The parish is reputed no part of the district of Garioch, Strathbogie, Buchan, or Foremartin. It, of old, belonged to the Dunbars, a branch of the Dunbars Earls of Murray. In King James the Second's time, a son of Crichton, chancellor of Scotland, by marrying the heiress, got the estate; in which family (afterwards dignified by the title of Viscount of Frendraught) part of the estate continued until the beginning of this century, and went always under the designation of the lordship and regality of Frendraught. The property of it now belongs to Mr Morison of Bogny, Mr Duff of Hatton, Messrs. Gordon of Cowbardy, Irvine of Corny-haugh, Leslie of Drumollo, Phyne of Cross, and Innes of Munelly. Bogny has about one-half; Hatton and Cowbardy are the next considerable; the other four are of smaller properties.

Each of the proprietors have mansion-houses, except Hatton. Those belonging to Bogny and Cowbardy are the principal; the rest equal to ministers' manses, with gardens and office-houses.

The valued rent of the parish is three thousand nine hundred and thirty-six pounds, six shillings, and eight pence, Scots, and the real rent about two thousand pounds sterling. Of old, it was divided into eighty ploughs, and nine mills, besides crofts; at present, it is in more ploughs, but only eight mills. There is also a good dyster and waulk-mill, within half a mile of the church. The minister's stipend is about a thousand pounds [Scots],<sup>1</sup> localled; and the schoolmaster has sixteen shillings and eight pence Scots off each of the original ploughs, besides the school, and salary as session-clerk.

The parishioners are reckoned to be three thousand, old and young, of both

<sup>1</sup> [In the year 1257, Pope Alexander IV. confirmed to the abbot and convent of the monastery of St. Thomas the Martyr at Arbroath, the grant which had been made to them, by Sir William of Ferendracht, knight, (without the consent of his diocesan) of the patronage of the church of Ferendracht (Ferindrach), in the diocese of Aberdeen, with right to apply the fruits of the benefice (estimated at thirty merks) to their own proper uses. In the year 1268, the church having become vacant by the death of Duncan, its last rector, the monks appointed a chaplain to serve in the cure of the parish, assigning to him for his salary, all the altarage, with the church land, and a manse; and reserving to themselves the great tithes of the whole parish, with eight merks yearly of the lesser tithes of wool or lambs. (Collections for a History of the Shires of Aberdeen and Banff, pp. 520–522.) By an error of the press, a notice of the neighbouring church of Forglynt, in the Chartulary of Aberdeen, under the year 1250, has been applied to the church of Ferendrach or Forgue. Cf. Registrum Episcopatus Aberdonensis. vol. i., p. 23; above, p. 59.]

“Dunkan de Ferndraghe (Fernyndroghe) chivalier (nobilis vir dominus Duncanus de Ferndraghe) del counte de Abredene” and “Eue qe fut la femme Maucolom de Fernyndraughe del counte de Abredene” swore fealty and homage to King Edward I. of England on his subjugation of Scotland in the year 1296. (The Ragman Rolls, pp. 96, 142, 132.) Sir Duncan of Ferendrach and Sir Henry his brother, knights, were present sexes,<sup>1</sup> among whom are a great many tradesmen, such as wrights, smiths, shoemakers, etc. The manufactory carried on in the parish is the linen, in all its branches; but they have no public bleachfield, being supply'd with that at Huntly, which lies in their neighbourhood, and where they are sure of merchants for their yarn and cloth, as they are at Bamff and Portsoy for their meal and bear. Thus, the linen and their crop are their staple commodities. The people in general are sensible, industrious, and substantial, and seldom known to go to law with one another.

The principal burns are two, Forgue and Frendraught. The first consists of two branches: one of them rises in the parish of Kinoir, runs to the north-west of Drumblade, and divides that parish from Cowbardy, till it meet with the other branch at Knight's-mill, where there is a good stone bridge, of two arches: the other branch takes its rise in Foudland, near Drumollo, and divides Drumblade (part of which lies like a triangle into the parish) on the east from Forgue, and runs north past Munelly, Cross, and the kirk of Drumblade, and from thence north-east and by north past Bogny and kirk of Forgue, where there is another stone bridge, of two arches; thence past the mill of Forgue, where it receives the burn of Frendraught, continues its course north past Haddo, mill and kirk of Inverkeithny, where it falls into the Doveran. At Inverkeithny there is another stone bridge, of one large arch. Its course is about eight miles. On the first branch stands mill of Cowbardy; on the second mill of Munelly; and on both the mill of Pitfancy, (and formerly Condland mill, which is now not used.) The burn of Frendraught takes its rise in Foudland, at a town of the parish called Cranloch, near Ythan Wells; runs north, past Frendraught, and mill thereof, where it is joined by Templand burn, which rises east-south-east from Frendraught, in the hills of Aucharny. From mill of Frendraught, it runs north, divides Inverkeithny from Forgue, till it come to mill of Forgue, where it falls into the the other burn above described. There is also a good bridge on this burn, at mill of Frendraught.

The small burns, such as Tarvis, Core, Riach, Gilligee, and others, all fall at a Justice Ayre, held under the walls of the castle of Aberdeen, in the year 1300. (Collections for a History of the Shires of Aberdeen and Banff, p. 340.)

" Michael de Ferendrach " appears as a witness to charters of King William the Lion, and Gillicryst earl of Marr, between the years 1203 and 1214. See above, pp. 190-192.]

into one or other of the two large ones. About three miles south-west from the kirk, in the hills of Foudland, the water of Ythan, which falls into the German ocean at the Newburgh, takes its rise, and, after a course of three-fourths of a mile, it runs past Glenmellen, and divides Auchterless in part from Forgue. Opposite to Glenmellen is to be seen the remains of a large intrenchment,<sup>1</sup> where King Robert Bruce and his army remained, it is said, a considerable time; and near to it, in the Berry-hill, is shown the cave where that Prince lay ill of the small-pox. About two miles from Ythan Wells, the silver streams of Urie take their rise, and divide Forgue from Inch and Culsamond, and afterwards enter The Garioch. On it stands the mill of Auchintender, within the parish. The only other burn rises near Balgavenny, runs east, and divides another part of Forgue from Auchterless. On it stands the mill of Garrie's-ford.

In this parish are several mineral springs. That near Cranloch is reckoned as strong as Peterhead, and much frequented in summer; and, if some huts were built for accommodation, it would be still more used. The stream, or strin, with its banks and pebbles, are all tinged with a crust of a dark brown like oker, the ground round it is mossy, and it undoubtedly is one of the steel spaws so frequent in Scotland.

About a century ago, the parish abounded with natural woods. The present roof of the church was made out of them; it is of oak. Little now remains, except about Frendraught, and on Forgue burn, the banks of which, for about two miles, is beautifully covered. There are several inclosures lately planted, and now thriving.

In this parish are four principal highways. The first, from Buchan, by Auchterless, to Huntly, crosses the parish from east to west, near Frendraught, towards Munelly and Drumblade; the second, from Banff to Garioch, by Inverkeithny and Hawkhill of Frendraught; the third, from Cullen to Portsoy, goes past Bognybrea, towards Knight's-mill, Drumblade, and the head of The Garioch: and the fourth, from Keith, Rothemay, etc., past kirk of Forgue, towards Auchterless and Aberdeen. There are four principal inns for travellers, where there is good accommodation, videlicet, at the kirk of Forgue, Bognybrae, Hawkhill, and Munelly.

There are four annual markets held at Hawkhill, belonging to Bogny, videlicet, <sup>1</sup> [See General Roy's Military Antiquities of the Romans in Britain. London, 1793. fol. The fifty-first plate of his work is a "Plan of grounds in the parishes of Forg, Auchterless, and Culsamon, and county of Aberdeen, exhibiting the ancient camp of Redites near Glenmilen, on the south bank of Ythan, together with the military lines and intrenchments near Tillimurgan." Cf. Chalmers' Caledonia, vol. i., pp. 127, 128; Mr. Stuart's Caledonia Romana, pp. 215, 249. Edinb. 1845; Professor Stuart's Essays on Scottish Antiquities, pp. 87, 88. at Christmas, in April, July, and September; the last a considerable fair for cattle. The kirk town of Forgue is erected into a burgh of barony, with the privilege of a weekly market, but at present is in disuetude.

The farm houses and mills are generally built of stone and lime, the heretors bearing part of the expence. There are some lime quarries in the parish, but firing being at such a distance renders them useless. Marle is to be found along the Forgue burn. The stones are generally of the whin and blue slate kind, but too small for covering houses. I never heard of marble quarries in the parish, but there is some freestone. The burns abound with trout and eel, and the parish in general with wild fowl and game.

In sundry places, rows of long stones, from six to ten foot above ground, are to be seen, perpendicularly placed, some in an oblong, others in a circular form; those on the hill head north of Frendraught are the largest, but without inscriptions. About a quarter of a mile west of Frendraught, on the roadside, at Tarvis burn, is to be seen an old cairn, or heap of stones, the tradition about which is, that, at this place, the last Dunbar of Frendraught was murdered, in regard he refused to consent to his daughter's marriage with Crichton, and which was perpetrated by some of his followers; after which, he married the lady and took possession of the estate. A mile south-east of Frendraught, on the roadside, towards Glenmellen, is Murray's Cairn, at which place Murray of Cowbardy was murdered by the Crichtons, upon some slight quarrel. Half a mile north from Frendraught, on the top of the Riach hill, stood the gibbet, upon which many suffered, as appears by the remains of their graves; and, a little below the bridge of Forgue, are to be seen the graves of a gang of gypsies, who suffered death by drowning. The lords of Frendraught were severe justiciaries within their own regality. Many other accounts of their severity might be here added.

Bogny is now patron of the parish, which all holds immediately of the crown, except Corny-haugh, which holds of Bogny. The lands of Corny-haugh are at the north-end of the Foreman-hill, opposite to Mayen, upon Doveran side, and so low that for six weeks in winter the sun never rises nor sets on them.

The church stands in the north end of the parish, in latitude 57° 27'. longitude 2° 11'. W., pleasantly situate on the burn of Forgue. It is a large parochial one, with two isles; that on the north is the burial place for the family of Bogny, and that on the south is pewed and desked for the congregation, and was the burial place of the Crichtons of Frendraught. The church is adorned with excellent painted seats,<sup>1</sup> carved work, etc.

The house of Bogny is in a fruitful plain, with handsome office-houses, and stands in the middle of inclosures, planted and improven, of about two miles circumference. To Mr. Morison of Bogny also belong the houses of Castle Conzie (not inhabited), Frendraught, Haddo, and mill of Forgue, all within this parish.

A charter by King Alexander II., confirming the church of Butheley (Meldrum) to the monks of St. Thomas at Arbroath, is dated at Fyvie (Fyyn) on the twenty-second of February, 1221—2. (Collections for a History of the Shires of Aberdeen and Banff, p. 561.)

In the reign of King Alexander III. (1249—1286), the eels taken in the stanks and waters of Fyvie were matter of account in the King's exchequer : “ Computum Reginaldi le Chene firmarij thanagii de Fermartin . . . Item per terram de Kilmachone datam burgensibus de Fyuyne de illo anno . x . marce . . . Memorandum quod Henricus de Fyuin debet reddere computum de anguillis de Fyuyne de toto tempore quo tenuit stagna et aquas de Fyuyne .” (The Chamberlain Rolls, vol. i. p. 33.* ) The account is probably of the year 1266. Cf. Registrum Episcopatus Aberdonensis, vol. i. p. 158.

The castle of Fyvie, “ Fyuin chastel,” was one of the stages in the progress of King Edward I. through Scotland in the year 1296. On Friday the twentieth of July he proceeded from Aberdeen to Kintore, “ a Kyntorne manoir”; and would seem, on the next day, to have ridden to Lunsfannan, and thence to Fyvie; a remarkable journey. On Sunday the twenty-second he went to Banff, "a Banet chastel," and on Monday to Cullen, "a Inuer-colan manoir." He encamped on Tuesday in the Enzie on the banks of the Spey, "le Mardy en tentes en Leunoy sur la riuiere de Spe." (The Ragman Rolls, pp. 92—100, 179, 183; Archaeologia, vol. xxi. p. 496; The Bannatyne Miscellany, vol. i. p. 278.) The castle of Fyvie, in the year 1437, seems to have been in ward of the crown. In the account of the King's chamberlain of Kintore and Fermartyn there is entered "pro custodia castri de Fyvy statim post obitum Domini Regis [20 Feb. 1437.] in virtualibus uti ab aliis caperetur . iiij . libre . v . solidi . ij . denarii . " (The Chamberlain Rolls, vol. iii. p. 367.)

In the year 1331, the issues received by the King's chamberlain from the burgh of Fyvie, were ten pounds, "et de . x . libris de prepositis burgi de Febyn," being nearly the same sum which was paid by the burghs of Cullen and Kyntor: "Et de . xij . libris . iiij . solidis . iiij . denariis . de propositis burgi de Culane . Et de . x . libris . xij . solidis . iiij . denariis . de prepositis de Kyntor ." (The Chamberlain Rolls, vol. i., pp. 221, 222.) So recently as the year 1511, the second tithe of the issues of the Chamberlain Ayre of the burgh of Fyvie, continued to be enumerated in the rental of the bishopric of Aberdeen: "decima itineris ville de Fyuy vt contingit." (Registrum Episcopatus Aberdonensis, vol. i. p. 358.)

Walter parson of Fyvie (Fiwin) is witness to a charter by John bishop of Aberdeen, between the years 1199 and 1207. (Liber S. Marie de Calchou, vol. ii. pp. 339, 340. Edinb. 1846. Presented to the Bannatyne Club by the Duke of Roxburghe.) In the year 1250, the vicarage of Fywin (Fyvyn) was taxed at thirty-three merks, and the vicar's provision was the altarage with the land of Ardingros (Ardincross). The great tithes of the whole parish, with five merks from the lesser tithe of wool or lambs yearly, were reserved to the abbot and convent of St. Thomas the Martyr at Arbroath, to whom the benefice belonged (before the year 1197) by gift of their founder, King William the Lion. (Registrum Episcopatus Aberdonensis, vol. i. p. 22; above, p. 59.) Henry of Lychtoun, bishop of Aberdeen, at the instance of the monks of Arbroath, in the year 1427, annexed the vicarage of the church of St. Peter at Fywe, (then vacant by decease of Sir Jhn of Crabe) to the neighbouring Priory, under condition that the brethren should find the perpetual vicar, by whom the cure of souls was to be served, in ten merks yearly, and a sufficient manse. The presentation of the vicar was vested in the abbot and convent; his admission and institution lay with the bishop. The monks were farther bound to make payment yearly of six merks to a chaplain serving in the cathedral of St. Machar at Aberdeen, and to find him in a decent habit. (Registrum Episcopatus Aberdonensis, vol. i. p. 225.)

The church of Turreff (Turuered) was given to the monks of St. Thomas at Arbroath, by Marjery countess of Buchan, before the year 1214. The grant was confirmed by King William the Lion, and by Adam bishop of Aberdeen (A.D. 1207—A.D. 1228); but was annulled or revoked during the episcopate of his successor Bishop Gilbert (A.D. 1228—A.D. 1239.) Cf. Registrum Vetus Cenobii de Aberbrothoc, MSS. Adv. Bibl.; and above, pp. 121, 122. In the year 1263, Sir William of Lamberton, rector of the church of Turreff (Turuereth), appears as a witness to a charter by Richard bishop of Aberdeen. (Collections for a History of the Shires of Aberdeen and Banff, p. 562.) Ten years afterwards, the church of Turreff (Turrech, Turreth) was, by Alexander Cumyn earl of Buchan, bestowed upon the Hospital of Saint Congan, which he founded at Turreff, for a master, six chaplains, and thirteen poor husbandmen of Buchan. (Registrum Episcopatus Aberdonensis, vol. i., pp. 30—34.)

The church of Turreff, by consent of the patron, Sir John Stuart earl of Buchan, was, in the year 1412, erected into a prebend of the cathedral of Saint Machar at Aberdeen. The whole fruits of the benefice (in which the Hospital of Saint Congan seems to have merged) were assigned to the prebendary, under burden of six merks yearly, a surplice, and certain other vestments, to a chaplain officiating in the cathedral, and of twelve merks yearly, with a toft and croft, to a perpetual vicar serving the cure of souls in the parish, and making his residence at Turreff. The right of presentation to the prebend was reserved to the Earl and his heirs. (Registrum Episcopatus Aberdonensis, vol. i. pp. 213, 214; vol. ii. p. 253.) A manse in the Chanony at Aberdeen, which, in contemplation of this erection, had been granted, in the year 1407, to Sir William Lang, rector of Turreff, was annexed to the prebend: it was built on a piece of ground which lay on the south side of the manse of the prebendary of Methlick, measuring eighty feet in breadth, and stretching from the public way on the east, to the Bishop's Loch on the west. (Id., vol. i. pp. 210, 211.)

" William de Kireuthbright / mestre del Hospital de Turrythe / del counte de Banf " swore fealty and homage to King Edward I. of England, on the subjugation of Scotland, in the year 1296. (The Ragman Rolls, p. 164.)]

<sup>a</sup> [Sir Niel or Nigel de Bruys, (the third brother of King Robert I.), a youth of great beauty, was taken by the English in the castle of Kildrummy, and was put to death at Berwick, or at Newcastle, in the year 1306. (J. Forduni Scotichronicon, lib. xii., cap. xi., vol. ii., p. 233; Scalacronica, p. 181; Chronicon de Lanercost, p. 206; Lord Hailes' Annals of Scotland, vol. ii., pp. 13, 14.) The Archdeacon of Aberdeen relates that tidings of the capture of the young knight and his companions were brought to the English King as he lay on his death-bed at Burgh-on-the-Sands, and that, when it was asked of him what should be done with these captives, he exclaimed, with a ghastly smile, Hang and draw:

<sup>1</sup> [On the third of November 1402, Isabel countess of Mar and lady of The Garioch, 'in viduitate sua existens,' gave to Alexander Keyth of Grandoun, the lordship of Glendovachy and the lands of Doun, by a charter dated at her castle of Kyndromy, 'testibus Gilberto Graham et Johanne Pontkyne militibus nostris, Thoma Brysbane consanguineo meo.' The grant was confirmed by King Robert III., by a charter (in which the lord of Grandoun is styled 'dilecto confederato nostro') dated at Dundonald on the eighth of February 1403. (MS. note from the original among the 'wrytes of Auchterhouse,' in the charter room of the Earl of Buchan, made about the year 1720 by George Crawfurd, author of the Lives of the Officers of State in Scotland.)]

On the seventh of October 1413, 'Alexander de Keyth miles dominus de Grandoun gives 'dilecto genero suo Patricio de Ogilvy filio et heredi Alexandri de Ogilvy vicecomitis de Angous,' and to Christian his wife, daughter of the grantor, his lands and barony of Doun in the sheriffdom of Banff, and his lordship of Grandoun in the sheriffdom of Aberdeen; 'testibus Johanne de Ogilvy domino ejusdem; Roberto Lovel domino de Ballawly; Alexandro Barclay domino de Garntilly; Alexandro de Moravia domino de Glaskwal; Johanne de Strachan domino de Carmylie.' By another charter of the same date, the Knight of Grandoun gives to the same parties his barony of Fotherleter in the sheriffdom of Aberdeen. Both grants are confirmed by King James I., by a charter dated at Aberdeen on the second of August 1428, and witnessed by John bishop of Glasgow the chancellor, William Foulis keeper of the privy seal, Sir John Forester chamberlain, and Sir Walter Ogilvy treasurer. The feast of Saint Drostan was celebrated on the fourteenth of December. His name was restored to the kalendar of the Scotish Church in the Service Book of King Charles I., in compliance with the King's instructions to the Scotish Bishope, "that in their kalendar they should keep such catholick saints as were in the English; such of the saints as were most peculiar to that kingdom [of Scotland] (especially those which were of the Royal blood, and some of the most holy bishops) being added to them." (Gordon's History of Scots Affairs, vol. ii., p. 76, note 3.)

Saint Drostan seems to have been held in reverence in more than one parish of the diocese. The Aberdeen Almanac for the year 1703 commemorates "Dustan fair at Deer," and "Dustan fair at Kirktown of Inch in The Geirie," both on the fourteenth of December.]

It is added in a note, that the seal attached to the original “is very intire, being the Dowglasses arms quartered first and fourth, with a lyon rampant second and third; supported by two savages; with the Earle of Dowglass's inscription round it.”

The original charter of vendition by the lord of Fyllorth, and the charter of confirmation by the lord of Abercorn and Aberdour, are printed in the Collections for a History of the Shires of Aberdeen and Banff, p. 448.

On the second of August 1456, William Rede of Coliston sold to Master John of Clat an annuity of twenty shillings from his lands of Litil Drumquhenyle in the barony of Fylorth. The vendition was confirmed on the following day by Alexander Fraser of Filorthe, the superior of the lands. (Registrum Episcopatus Aberdonensis, vol. i., pp. 77, 278.) The annuity was afterwards bequeathed by John of Clat for the maintenance of a chaplain to serve, at the altar of Saint Katherine the virgin, in the cathedral of Saint Machar at Aberdeen. The same Alexander of Saint Clare, son of Thomas of Saint Clare, received from William earl of Ross, a grant of the davach of Bray, in the 'marage' of Fornewyr, in Invernesshire. (Registrum Magni Sigilli Regum Scottorum, p. 76.)

Thomas of Saint Clare appears as a witness to a charter by William earl of Ross to Henry Stewart, and Mariot his wife, of the land of Kennachrowe (Kenerove) and Strathury (Strawery), 'cum omnibus hominibus eandem terram habitantibus,' lying in the 'marage' of Delgany, the earldom of Ross, and the shire of Inverness; dated at Delgany, on the first of April 1362, "testibus Dofnaldo Dei gracia abbate de Nova Ferina . domino Symone priore de Bello Loco . Hugone de Ross et Johanne de Ross fratribus nostris . Johanne de Haya domino de Tolibothuille . Thoma de Sancto Claro et aliis ." The grant is confirmed by King Robert II., on the sixth of March 1372, 'apud Seonam in pleno Parlamento.' (Original in the Innes charter chest at Floors.)]

“ Andrew persone del eglise de Fylorth / del counte de Abirdene” swore fealty and homage to King Edward I. of England, on his subjugation of Scotland, in the year 1296. (The Ragman Rolls, p. 164.)

In an old calendar of a lost roll of decrees in parliament is, “ Resignacio aduocacionis ecclesie de Philorthe in Buchane domino Regi per Hugonem comitem de Ross / data apud Perth . xxix . Martii . m . ccc . xxx . ” (Acts of the Parliaments of Scotland, vol. i. app. i. p. 153. Edinb. 1845.)

King David II., on the eighteenth of October 1345, gave his consent as patron of the benefice, to the erection of the church of Philorth into a prebend of the cathedral of Saint Machar at Aberdeen. (Registrum Episcopatus Aberdonensis, vol. i. pp. 76, 77.) But the contemplated erection was not then made; and, on the twentieth of July 1347, the King granted the church to the bishop and chapter, to be applied by them to their own proper uses, as one of their common churchee. (Id., p. 79.) This grant was renewed on the twentieth of January 1362, with the alteration, that the fruits of the benefice should be applied to the maintenance of two chaplains serving in the cathedral. (Registrum Magni Sigilli Regvm Scotorvm, p. 76.) On the sixth of September following, Bishop Alexander of Kyninmund, provided that the salary of these chaplains should be ten pounds yearly: that the vicar serving the cure at Philorth, and making his residence there, should have the altarage of the church, with a manse and garden; that he should pay yearly, to the common procurator of the chapter, forty shillings for the common use of the canons in residence; and that the rest of the fruits should be at the disposal of the dean and canons of the chapter, to whom the right of presentation to the vicarage was declared to belong. (Registrum Episcopatus Aberdonensis, vol. i., pp. 99—101.) Soon afterwards, the church appears to have been erected into a prebend of the cathedral. (Id., vol. ii., p. 253.) In the year 1437, the prebendary of Philorth was required to find a subdeacon (to whom he was to pay forty shillings yearly) as his vicar or ‘stallar’ to serve in the cathedral. <sup>2</sup> [From the Acts of the Parliaments of Scotland, vol. v. pp. 153, 154.]

The lands of Strichen and Kyndrocht, “Stratheyn et Kyndrochet,” with their mill, were granted to Cospatrik Macmadethyn by William Cumyn earl of Buchan (who died in the year 1233) for the payment yearly of two stones of wax at the Feast of Whitsunday, and the performance of so much of the military service of the earldom of Buchan as attached to these lands. (Registrum Episcopatus Aberdonensis, pp. 14, 15.)

Cospatrik Macmadethyn would appear to be the same with the “Cospatrik filius Maded,” who, together with his brother Malothen,<sup>a</sup> is witness to a charter by Fergus earl of Buchan, (granted before the year 1214) to John the son of Uthred, of the lands of Fedreth and Ardindrach, in exchange for the lands of Slany and Crudan. (Collections for a History of the Shires of Aberdeen and Banff, pp. 408–409.)

John of Kyndrocht appears as a witness to a charter by Alexander Cumyn earl of Buchan, about the year 1250. (Original in the charter room at Castle Forbes..)

<sup>a</sup> Malotheny mac Madethyn is found among the witnesses to a charter by Malcolm earl of Fyfe, between the years 1206 and 1223. (Registrum Episcopatus Moravienis, p. 59.) Madethin mac Mathusalem is a witness to more than one charter by Duncan earl of Fyfe, who died in the year 1204. (Registrum Prioratus Sancti Andree, pp. 242–244.)

The benefice of Ratheyn in Buchan (from which the parish of Strichen was chiefly taken) was given to the chapter and college of canons of the cathedral of Saint Machar at Aberdeen, "in proprios vsus ad communam suam," by King Robert I., on the twentieth of March 1328. (Registrum Episcopatus Aberdonensis, vol. i. pp. 47, 48.) The grant was confirmed by the bishop, Henry le Chene, who died before the Feast of Pentecost, in the year 1329. (Id., vol. ii., p. 150.) In the year 1520, the chapter's common churches of Logy-buchan and Rathyne were let in lease for the yearly rent of two hundred and twelve pounds. (Id., vol. i. p. 384.)

Richard of Forbes, the chamberlain of the crown lands in Marr and Buchan, in accounting for the issues of the barony of Kynedwarde, then in the King's hands by the death of Alexander earl of Ross, makes deduction of six shillings paid to the chaplain of Rattray from the lands of Strichen: "Et per solucionem factam capellano celebranti in capella de Rattray de vno annuo redditu sex solidorum annuatim dicte capelle debito de terris de Strathechtin de anno computi . vj . solidi." (The Chamberlain Rolls, vol. iii. p. 529.) There was a tradition, in the beginning of the last century, that the chapel was founded by an Earl of Buchan for the soul's repose of his son, who perished by drowning in a well at Rattray. The church of Inverugie, with the chapel of Fetterangus, ‘ecclesia de Inuerugyn cum capella de Fethiranus,’ was given to the monks of Saint Thomas at Arbroath, about the beginning of the thirteenth century, by Ralph le Neym, ‘ex donacione Radulphi Nayni.’ The grant was confirmed by King William the Lion, between the years 1212 and 1214; by Adam, bishop of Aberdeen, between the years 1207 and 1228; and by Pope Honorius III. on the thirteenth of May, 1220. (Registrum Vetus Cenobii de Aberbrothoc, MS. Adv. Bibl.; and above, p. 121.)

The family of ‘Le Neym,’ Namus, Nainus, or Nanus, may be traced in the chartularies, from about the middle of the twelfth to the same period of the thirteenth century, when it seems to disappear from our records. It had possessions on the eastern marches between England and Scotland, as well as in Tweeddale, and on the shores of Buchan. How, before the end of the thirteenth century, its domain of Inverugie became the inheritance of the knightly house of Le Chen, does not appear.

Radulphus Nanus is a witness, between the years 1153 and 1160, to a charter by King Malcolm, at Roxburgh, confirming a grant by the Earl Cospatric. (Liber S. Marie de Melros, vol. i. p. 9). He is a witness to charters by King William the Lion, at Lanark, between the years 1165 and 1171. (Id. vol. i. pp. 39, 43, 141.) Between the years 1175 and 1180, with consent of Richard his son and heir, he gives half a carucate of land, in Broctun, with common pasture of the hamlet, to the chapel of the same name, in the parish of Stobo, in Tweeddale. (Registrum Episcopatus Glasguensis, vol., i. p. 41.) Along with Richard and Ralph his sons, Ralph le Neym appears as a witness to a grant made to the monks of Melrose by Walter of Wildleshources between the years 1165 and 1185. (Liber S. Marie de Melros, vol. i. p. 109.)

Ricardus Nanus is witness to a charter granted by Robert of Bernoldebi to the monks of Melrose, between the years 1189 and 1199 (Liber S. Marie de Melros, vol. i. pp. 142, 143); to a charter by Walter Corbet, about the year 1200 (Liber S. Marie de Calchou, vol. ii. p. 287); to an agreement between the monks of Kelso and William of Vipont in the year 1203 (Id. vol. i. p. 112); to charters of Earl Patrick of Dunbar, and of Walter the son of Alan assumptis presbyteris et clericis viris Deo deditis ad partes Scocie occidentales et ad confines de Strogeth applicuit vbi cum eisdem solitariam admodum ducebat vitam vidensque terram quod esset bona ad inhabitandum

the son of Walter, the King's steward, between the years 1202 and 1214 (Liber S. Marie de Melros, vol. i. pp. 40, 63, 65); to a grant by Eustace de Vesci, probably of the year 1212 (Id. vol. i. p. 154); and to a charter by Gervase Avenel, between the years 1214 and 1218 (Id. vol. i. p. 177). Ricardus Nanus and Radulphus, his son, are witnesses to a charter by Robert Corbet, about the year 1210 (Id. vol. i. pp. 105, 106).

Ralph le Neym is witness to charters by Symon of Lyndesay, Symon Mauleverer, and Gilbert Avenel, before the year 1218. (Liber S. Marie de Melros, vol. i. pp. 130, 131). A charter by Ansell of Moll, granted before the year 1214, is witnessed by Henry le Neym; by Ralph le Neym, and Richard le Neym his son; and by Herbert, Walter, and Ralph, the sons of Ralph le Neym. (Id. vol. i. p. 129). A charter granted between the years 1216 and 1227, by Robert of Muscamp, of certain lands on the English side of the border, describes them as bounded on one part by the lands of Ralph le Neym. (Id. vol. i. pp. 268, 271.) 'Radulphus Nainus et Johannes persona frater suus' are witnesses to a charter by Robert, the son of Robert of Trockelaw, of the land of Schottun, about the year 1230. (Liber S. Marie de Calchou, vol. ii. p. 293). By a charter which is confirmed by King Alexander II., in the year 1234, Ralph le Neym gives to the monks of Kelso three acres of land in Yhetam, over against Colpinhope, beside the streamlet which divides the realms of England and Scotland, as the same had been perambulated by his father in presence of himself and his brethren. (Id. vol. ii. pp. 307, 308). 'Dominus Radulfus Naymin' is witness to a charter by 'Rogerus Lardenarius' before the year 1243. (Liber S. Marie de Melros, vol. i. p. 239.)

In the year 1459, Master John of Levingston, vicar of Inuerugy, was appointed by the alderman and common council of the burgh of Aberdeen, to be the master of work of a proposed bridge across the Dee. (Extracts from the Council Register of the Burgh of Aberdeen, 1398-1570, p. 20.) It would appear that the design was abandoned, probably as too great an undertaking for the slender revenues of the town, until it was revived in the beginning of the subsequent century by the pious Bishop Elphinstone, and successfully completed by his successor Bishop Dunbar. There seems to have been a bridge over the Dee, perhaps on the same site, in the year 1384, with a paved road leading southwards across the Mounth. (Registrum Episcopatus Aberdonensis, vol. ii. pp. 286, 287.) So early as the year 1234, the Dee had been spanned by a bridge at Kincardine O'Neill, where also an Hospital was built, on the line of what continued, from the eleventh to the eighteenth century, to be the main road over the Mounth, or mountain barrier dividing the northern from the southern provinces of Scotland. (Id. p. 268.) The remains of a third bridge over the same river, probably of the same age, were lately brought to light, near the mouth of Glenmuick; and there was, perhaps, a fourth at Durris as early as the year 1265. (The Chamberlain Rolls, p. 20*)

In a diary of the time kept by a country gentleman of Buchan, it is recorded that, in the month of July or of August 1589, King James the Sixth "was at the Craig of Inuerugie, at the laird's daughter's marriage." (Gordon's History of Scots Affairs, vol. i. p. [xxxiii] note.)]

NOTICES OF THE ABBEY OF SAINT MARY OF DEIR.

[The following scanty list of the Abbots of Deir is submitted by the editor, in the hope that it may hereafter help in the compilation of a more perfect catalogue, and that, meanwhile, it may serve to supply, in some measure, the absence of charters and other ancient records of the Monastery.]

The Cistercian abbey of Deir, dedicated, like all the houses of the order, in honour of the Blessed Virgin, was founded by William, the first Earl of Buchan, of the great race of the Cumyns, who died in the year 1233, “

“ Anno Domini m.ccc. xxxij. obiit Willelmus Cumyn comes de Buthhan abbatie de Der fundator.” (Chronica de Mailros, p. 144. Edinb. 1835.) “ Anno Domini millesimo ducentesimo trigesimo tertio . . . obiit Willelmus Cumyn comes de Buchan fundator abbatiae de Deir.” (J. Forduni Scotichronicon, lib. ix. cap. xlviij.; vol. ii. p. 59.) “ Willelmus comes Buchanie fundator monasterii de Deyre.” (Extracta e Variis Cronicis Scocie, p. 94.)

and is said to have chosen his sepulture within its walls.<sup>a</sup> The foundation charter is not known to exist; but it would seem to have conveyed to the brethren, the churches of Deir, and Inverugie St. Peter<sup>b</sup> (or Peterhead), together with the broad lands which they held in these parishes. By subsequent grants of their munificent founder, they acquired the lands of Fechil, on the banks of the Ythan,<sup>c</sup> and the lands of Barre in Strath-isla.<sup>d</sup> The latter were granted to the monks in free forest, with right of cutting timber, for the building and repair of the monastery,<sup>e</sup> in the woods, which in that age seem to have stretched around the base of the Knock Hill.<sup>f</sup>

According to record or tradition, preserved in the abbey until the middle of the sixteenth century, the date of its foundation was the twenty-ninth of January 1219. Three of the brethren by whom it was peopled, came from a house of the order which the royal bounty of good Saint David had planted at Kynlos, in Murray, during the previous century. Their names were Hugo, Arthur, and John; and they were believed to have succeeded, one after the other, to the rule of the infant abbey.<sup>g</sup> This, however, may

HUGO may, perhaps, be accepted as the first abbot of Deir, on the faith of the tradition of the house, and of a marginal correction in the Melrose Annals, suggesting that the abbot whom their text reckoned as the Kynlos, p. 24.) Ferrerius, as he tells us in this passage and elsewhere, was helped in the composition of his work by Dene Robert Stevenson, Subprior of Deir, on whose knowledge of the history of the Scottish Cistercians, he bestows great praise. Thus, on the twenty-eighth of January 1536, he writes to the Abbot of Kynlos: “id ipsum ego, quod ex te nunc cupio, adcuratissime egi in parte altera, transmissis literis ad Suppriorem a Deire apud quem multa dicuntur esse talia. Quod si voluerit (uti pollicetur) singula indicare in hac re, que sunt illi notissima, curabo et ego ne denuo per scriptorum oscitantiam tam multa vetustatis arcana in tenebras relabantur.” (p. 10.) Soon afterwards Ferrerius himself addressed to the Subprior of Deir the following letter (p. 11.):

“Literatissimo vetustatis assertori Domino Roberto Stephano Suppriori a Deir suo charissimo, Salutem.

Collegi superioribus diebus, vir suavissime, praegrandem sylvam monimentorum veterum a Kynlos, veluti materiam futuro operi et historiae texendae adprimo necessariam. Verum in his, pleraque invenio obscuriora nimium et mutila magis, quam ut veritati historiae copulari digne satis queant: nisi aliunde refuslerit lux aliquanto major. Et sunt in Scotia qui his tenebris multum luminis adferre possint, si rogentur; apud quos, infinita vetustatis scripta adservari non ignoramus. Sed nullum plane scio hominem, qui tam nobis possit et velit commodare in hoc opere, quam tu unus, et vetustatis adsertor et studiosorum omnium amicus adprime candidus simul et eruditus. Proinde rogo ut ex tuorum Abbatum catalogo, excerpas si quos habes (habes enim multos, scio) abbates a Kynlos, et illos ad me mittas. Nec opus est nobis tuo ad hanc rem nunc summo labore; tantum transcribito in nostrum libellum per suos locos tribus verbis Abbatum nomina, ordinem, et annum Domini. Significabis etiam an viri fuerint frugales, an parum frugi homines: et quo pacto enecti sunt ad tantam dignitatem, an canonice vel per ambitionem potius. Praeterea adjicies his, paucula quaedam de primo vestro Abbe et monachis illis qui cum eo ex Kynlos primum hue commigrarunt; ac quoties Abbates ex Kynlos acceperitis; qui etiam ex vestris ad Kynlos venerint, tanquam pastores rectoresque. Et si quid praeterea habes memoria dignum, nobis communicatum voles. Quod si feceris curabo intelligas te nequaquam lusisse operam adversum eum qui te unice diligit cum toto tuo conventu et Abbe optimo. Vale. Apud Kynlos, pridie Non. Februarij 1537. calculo Romano.

Tuus ex animo JOANNES FERRERIUS Pedemontanus.”

We find allusion made elsewhere to the Catalogue of the Abbots of Deir. Dempster, writing of Alan bishop of Caithness, who, he says, flourished about the year 1290, adds that he left certain works, “quorum apices in Catalogo Deirensi supersunt, et, ut existimo, apud illustrissimum Comitem Martialem in bibliotheca Dunotria extant.” (Historia Ecclesiastica Gentis Scotorum, t. i. p. 33.) He again quotes the “Index Deirensis” (t. i. p. 35; t. ii. p. 491.)

first, was really the second. His rule must have been short, scarcely exceeding at the farthest eighteen months.

His successor was Dene ROBERT, who, on the death of Ralph abbot of Kynlos, on the second of November 1220, was chosen to preside over that community.<sup>a</sup>

Dene ALEXANDER, prior of Kynlos, succeeded to the rule of Deir. He died, on the sixth of September 1222, on his way to a general chapter of the order of Citeaux.<sup>b</sup>

About the beginning of the year 1224, Dene HERBERT, a monk of Cupar, was elected abbot of Deir.<sup>c</sup>

WALTER, abbot of Deir, is found in the year 1226, mediating in a controversy between the church of Murray and David of Strathbolgyn, Gylbert Hostiarius (or Durward), and others of the dioceses of Murray and Aberdeen.<sup>d</sup> The superior of the Cistercians of Buchan about this time appears to have been often engaged in offices of a like kind. In the year 1225, the Abbot of Deir was an arbiter between the Bishop of Murray and Thomas of Thirlestan, in a strife regarding the church of Abertarf; and between the same prelate and Robert Hode, in a quarrel as to the manor of Lananbrid.<sup>e</sup> In the year 1227, he was one of the judges delegated by the Pope to determine the conflicting claims of the Bishops of Murray and of Ross to diocesan jurisdiction over the churches of Ardrosser and Gyll-

The death of WALRAN, abbot of Deir, is recorded in the year 1234.<sup>c</sup> He may be supposed to be the same with Valerantius, a native of France, the fourth abbot in the list of Ferrerius, who commends him for his learning.<sup>d</sup>

HUGH, the venerable prior of Melrose, was chosen in his place; but at the end of twelve months resigned the office, partly on account of his bodily infirmities, partly by reason of the too keen and searching air of Buchan. Returning to the serener skies of Teviotdale, he was re-elected to the priorate, and died soon afterwards.<sup>e</sup>

The monks of Deir took their next abbot from their own cloister. He was named ROBERT, and ruled the brethren for the long period of seventeen years, dying in the year 1252.<sup>f</sup>

HENRY, prior of Kynlos, succeeded in the same year. He was deposed in the year 1262, but for what cause does not appear.<sup>g</sup> In his time, an agreement was made between the Bishop of the diocese, his dean and chapter, on one side, and the Abbot and convent, on the other, by which twenty merks yearly from the fruits of the church of Deir were assigned to a canon of the

A monk of Melrose, Dene ADAM of Smalham, was chosen to be the successor of the deprived abbot; but, in the year 1267, he demitted office of his own accord, "choosing rather to live in the sweet converse of the brethren of Melrose," says the proud Chronicle of that house, "than to govern an unworthy flock, under the lowly roofs of Deir."<sup>d</sup>

Dene HUGH, the cellarer, was the next abbot; and with his accession unfortunately the Annals of Melrose close their notices of the monastery.

The doubtful authority of Ferrerius would place in the list of the abbots of Deir, about this time, Richard, afterwards abbot of Kynlos, who died in the year 1274;<sup>e</sup> and the still more suspicious testimony of Dempster would enrol in the catalogue a Saint Guinoth, whom he supposes to have been confessor to King Alexander III., and to have died in an embassy to the Count of Holland, in the year 1287.<sup>f</sup>

It is certain that, in the year 1279, an abbot of Deir, whose name is not preserved, was appointed by the Apostolic See to be judge in a controversy regarding the church of Keltalargyn, between the Bishop of Mur-

The Abbot and convent subsequently consented to the endowment, from the fruits of the last which the brethren of Saint Mary were fated to receive from his race or lineage. In the memorable revolution which placed the Earl of Carrick on the Scotish throne, the illustrious family of Cumyn was so utterly overthrown, that, says a Chronicle of the age, “of a name which numbered at one time three earls and more than thirty belted knights, there remained no memorial in the land, save the orisons of the monks of Deir.”<sup>a</sup> did not withhold his favour from the abbey of their foundation, when the sanguinary struggle came to an end, and his dominion was established in peace. The rolls of King Robert I. make mention of three charters which he granted to the monastery of Deir: one, conveying to it the church of Foveran; another, ratifying the gift which it had received of the church of Kynedwart; and the third, apparently confirming the possessions of the brethren generally.<sup>c</sup> Nor was the convent tardy in proffering its fealty

In the year 1437, the salary of the chaplain of Kynedwarde was three pounds six shillings and eight-pence: in the years 1506 and 1519, it amounted to twice that sum, or six pounds thirteen shillings and four pence. The abbot of Deir sat in the parliament at Cambuskenneth, on the sixth of November 1314; and appended his seal to the ordinance which declared that all who had died in arms against King Robert, or had not then come to his allegiance, should forfeit their lands and estate, and be denounced as enemies to the realm of Scotland. He was again present in the parliament at Ayr, in the following year, which enacted that if King Robert should die without leaving male issue of his body, he should be succeeded by his brother Edward.

The name of the abbot who took part in these proceedings was MICHAEL. He is the same person, doubtless, who figures in a transaction with a baron of his neighbourhood, which, though without date, must be referred to this period. William of Fedreth, the son and heir of the deceased Sir Magnus of Fedreth, knight, becomes bound to the abbot and convent of Deir, in service, council, help, and maintenance in all their causes and affairs; and renounces all title to that portion of the park of Badorosky, on the north side of the burn, which had been claimed by his father. The monks, on their part, grant to him their lands of the greater Auchrathy, to be held of the convent, as over lord, for payment of two merks yearly, and common suit at the head courts of the abbey.<sup>a</sup> About the year 1316, the abbot

The abbot and convent subsequently gave their consent to the erection, from the fruits of the benefice of Foveran, of a chaplainry in the cathedral church of Saint Machar, at Aberdeen. The salary of the chaplain, in the year 1437, was four pounds; and, in the years 1506 and 1519, six pounds thirteen shillings and fourpence. The ancient family of Fedreth derived its descent probably from John the son of Uthred, who about the year 1206 received a grant of the lands of Fedreth, in the parish of Deir, from Fergus earl of Buchan. (Collections for a History of the Shires of Aberdeen and Banff, pp. 407–409.)

William of Fedreth (probably the son of Magnus) appears in the years 1286 and 1294 as the husband of Christian de Moravia, one of the heiresses of Duffus, in Murrayland. (Registrum Episcopatus Moraviensis, pp. 144, 145, 341.)

Michael appends his seal to three charters by Eustacia of Colville, lady of Ochiltree, and widow of Sir Reginald le Chene the elder, conveying the patronage of the church of Ochiltree, in the deanery of Kyle and diocese of Glasgow, to the monks of St. Mary of Melrose.<sup>a</sup>

In the year 1325, the lord abbot of Deir, along with the abbot of Kilwynning, assisted at a perambulation of the marches between the lands of Ardlogy, belonging to the monastery of Arbroath, and the King's park of Fyvie.<sup>b</sup> About this time, according to a tradition which reached Ferrerius, Adam, a monk of Deir, was chosen abbot of Kynlos.<sup>c</sup>

The next superior of Deir, of whom record is found, is the abbot JOHN. He is a witness to the grant by Christian de Bruce, lady of The Garioch, of a toft of land, and a hundred shillings yearly, to the chapel of St. Mary the Virgin, in The Garioch. The date of the charter cannot be precisely ascertained, but it must be between the years 1338 and 1344, or the years 1355 and 1357.<sup>d</sup>

We discover that about the year 1390, the abbey burdened its lands of to King Edward of England, on his subjugation of Scotland, in the year 1296. (The Ragman Rolls, p. 172.)

In the rolls of missing charters by King David II., are "Carta given by William Feddereffe of that Ilk to William Cumming and Helen Feddereffe of the lands of Fedreffe"; "Carta to Ranald Chene of the fourth part of Kathness, given by William Fedrey, in vicecomitatu de Inuerness." (Robertson's Index to the Charters, pp. 46, 62.)

It has been supposed that William of Fedreth, the husband of Christian de Moravia, was constable of Roxburgh in the year 1262. But the authority referred to, seems rather to apply to the knightly family of Fendraught. The name, written in one place "Dominus Willelmo de Fetherich tunc constabulario de Rokisbuc," is written elsewhere "Dominus W de Ferendrith tunc temporis constabulario de Rokesbuc." (Liber S. Marie de Melros, vol. i., pp. 294, 301.)

The charter must have been granted before the close of the year 1357, when the Lady of The Garioch died. It speaks of her husband, Sir Andrew of Murray, as dead; and must, therefore, have been granted after the year 1338, the date of his decease. It is witnessed by Alexander bishop of Aberdeen; and must have been granted, therefore, either between the years 1338 and 1344, during the episcopate of Alexander of Kynnimumund,

Fechil, on the Ithan, with the yearly payment of a merk sterling to Laurence of Foty, a burgess of Aberdeen, in exchange for a tenement and building in the burgh of Aberdeen, in the street called The Foty Gate, between the land of Duncan Lang and the land of Duncan of Tarves.<sup>a</sup>

King Robert III., between the years 1390 and 1406, bestowed on the monks of Deir the custom-duty, which had been payable to the crown, on the wool both of the abbey's lands, and of the parishes of which it held the tithes.<sup>b</sup> The brethren would seem to have devoted considerable attention to the preparation of the fleece. In the year 1364, the monastery furnished to the King's chamberlain, wool of the value of several pounds; and in the year 1401, the abbot of Der is enumerated among the lords and freeholders of Buchan, from whom the burgesses of Aberdeen were forbidden to buy wool, except at certain prices fixed by municipal statute.<sup>d</sup>

The notices which occur of the abbey during the fifteenth century are few and scanty.

In the year 1403, the abbot of Deir was present, along with the bishop of the diocese, in the vestry of the church of St. Nicholas at Aberdeen, at an

It is believed that a spacious house, built in the form of a court, on the south side of The Castlegate, which after the Reformation became the property of the Earls Marischal, originally belonged to the Lord Abbot of Deir. (Collections for a History of the Shires of Aberdeen and Banff, p. 187; Inquisitiones Speciales vicecom. de Aberdeen, no. 240.) Marischal's Lodging, or Marischal's Hall, as it was called, after filling a notable place in the annals of the Brave Town, was pulled down about the year 1765, to make way for the street which takes its name from the old mansion. (The Book of Bon-Accord, pp. 118–121, 145.) It may be allowed, perhaps, to conjecture, that the building occupied the site of the house in The Foty Gate which the monks of Deir purchased from Laurence of Foty, at the end of the fourteenth century.

In the parliament which met at Edinburgh, on the sixth of March 1458, the abbot of Deir was chosen to be one of the lords of session, and was appointed one of four commissioners for the reformation of the hospitals within the diocese of Aberdeen.<sup>d</sup>

Ferrerius records that between the years 1450 and 1460, while Dene John Flutere was abbot of Kynlos, one of his monks, ARTHUR, was chosen to preside over the brethren of Deir. said to have derived his surname from the lands of Pittendreich, in Banffshire, and to have resigned office in the year 1509.<sup>a</sup>

JOHN OF INNES succeeded. During his time, the monastery had a strife with the brethren of Kynlos regarding the tithes of the lands of Fechil, which were claimed by the latter as due to their church of Ellon. The monks of Deir contended that the tithes belonged to their own abbey. The dispute drew to such consequence, that it came before a provincial chapter of the order at Edinburgh, where all the Cistercian abbots in Scotland were present. Their award failed to compose the quarrel, which was then referred to the decision of the Bishop of Aberdeen. He determined in favour of Kynlos, which thus gained an increase to its revenue, as we are told, of forty shillings yearly.<sup>b</sup> This occurred, says Fererrius, before the abbot Thomas Chrystal, had ceased to govern in Kynlos, in the year 1526. The same venerable father, he adds, was appointed visitor of his order throughout Scotland, and more than once used the authority of his office in restoring the fallen discipline of the monastery of Deir.<sup>c</sup>

MICHAEL PITTEDRIECH is said to have resigned his office of abbot of Deir about the year 1542.<sup>d</sup>

In the year 1543, ROBERT KEITH, brother of William fourth Earl Marischal, was presented to the abbey by the Queen Dowager.<sup>e</sup> He was not yet inaugurated in July 1544, when he is styled postulate abbot, in a deed by which the convent appointed certain procurators for the recovery of lands belonging to them, in the burgh of Aberdeen.<sup>f</sup> There seem at this time to have been in all fourteen brethren in the monastery, including the abbot, the prior, the sub-prior, and two economists. The prior's office was held by Dene Robert Stevensoun, the brother with whom Ferrerius corresponded, when he was sub-prior in the year 1537. The abbot Robert is praised by Dempster for his zeal in reforming the prevalent immorality of the clergy; and so scandalous were the vices of churchmen in that age, that the praise may not have been undeserved, though it is scarcely doubtful that he himself left a son, the fruit of his amours, who was created Lord Dingwall in the year 1584. Robert Keith died at Paris; on the twelfth of June 1551; and was buried, before the altar of Saint Ninian of Galloway,<sup>a</sup> in the church of the Carmelites, near the Place Maubert, in the Quartiere de S. The abbot of Deir sat in the parliament which met at Edinburgh on the twenty-ninth of November 1558; and was chosen, on the part of the clergy, to be one of the Lords of the Articles.<sup>c</sup> His name does not appear. He was probably the last superior of the house; and to his time, perhaps, may be referred a short survey of its spiritual discipline and temporal estate, which is preserved in the library of Trinity College, at Cambridge.<sup>d</sup> I regret that I have been disappointed in the hope of procuring a copy of this paper for insertion in the present volume.

The Reformation placed the possessions of the abbey, with the title of its commendator, in the hands of ROBERT KEITH, the second son of William fourth Earl Marischal. Though sharing largely in the spoils of the ancient faith, he would appear to have been at first no friend to the teachers of the new doctrines. To a request preferred by him in the year 1569, with the countenance of the Regent Murray, that he might be relieved from certain payments due by him to the preachers at the abbey's churches, the General

Dempster commemorates a Samuel, prior of Deir, whose marvellous skill in mathematics gained him the reputation of a wizard among the people; and who, dying in the year 1547, was buried in the chapel at Roslin. (Historia Ecclesiastica Gentis Scotorum, t. i., p. 233.)

Assembly gave for answer, that “the kirk can in no wise remitt the thing that pertains to the poor ministers,” especially to such a one as “my Lord of Deir, who debursed his money to the enemies of God, to prosecute his servants and banish them out of the realme.”<sup>a</sup>

The commendator of Deir sat in the privy council on the twenty-second of July 1565;<sup>b</sup> and his name occurs in the deliberations of the general assembly of the kirk during the years 1573, 1578, 1581, 1582, and 1583. He appears in the year 1574 as having granted to his father a lease of the tithes of the abbey’s churches of Deir, Inverugie St. Peter, Kynedar, and Foveran.<sup>c</sup> In the year 1587, when he was fifty-eight years old, he resigned the whole possessions of the monastery into the hands of the King, who immediately erected them into a temporal barony, called the Lordship of Altrie, to be held by the commendator during his life; and on his death (which took place before the year 1593), to descend to his nephew, George Earl Marischal, and his heirs male, and assigns. Soon afterwards, the abbey was seized, on what pretence does not appear, by the Earl’s brother, Robert Keith of Benholm. He kept possession, by the strong hand, for six weeks; and when driven from it by the Earl, on the fifteenth of December 1590, withdrew to the castle of Fedderat, where, after a siege of three days, terms of truce were agreed to between the brethren.<sup>d</sup>

<sup>d</sup> Mr. James Man has preserved the following passages of “A Journal of Occurrences from the year 1587 to the year 1674,” written by a gentleman of Buchan:

“October 1590. Mr. Robert Keith, brother to the Earl of Mareschal, possessed himself of the Abbey of Deer, wherein he remained six weeks; and out of which, being dislodged, December 15, by Mareschal and Lord Altrie and their company, he fled to Fedderat, which they, attempting in vain three days after to take in, came to a truce with him.

“February 13, [1590-1]. He skirmished with my Lord Altrie’s soldiers, slew one Macknab, and carried off all my lord’s goods out of Mintlay.”

(Memoirs of Scotish Affairs from 1624 to 1651, reprinted in Gordon’s History of Scots Affairs, vol. i., p. [xxxiii.] note.) The Earl Marischal, on the twenty-sixth of September 1590, obtained letters from the King, “charging the haill inhabitantis and his Graceis

In the year 1549, the abbey's lands in the shire of Aberdeen, were valued at twenty-one pounds a year.<sup>a</sup> The whole revenues of the monastery, about the year 1565, were reported to be five hundred and seventy-two pounds, eight shillings, and sixpence; thirteen bolls and a half of wheat; fourteen chalders and ten bolls of bear; sixty three chalders, nine bolls, one firlot, and three pecks and a half of meal.<sup>b</sup>

The abbey was built on what is now a fruitful and pleasant bank of the Ugie; but in the thirteenth century, when the monks of St. Mary chose it for the site of their cloister, was probably a lonely waste of marsh and forest. Gordon of Straloch, who visited its ruins about two centuries ago, says that the monastery stood "in depressa valle, olim tota silvestri;"<sup>c</sup> and it is easy to recognise in the description, the characteristic features of the solitary places in which the founders of the Cistercian order loved to dwell.

According to another copy of this record, quoted by Bishop Keith, the rental of the Abbey stood thus: "money, 805*l.* 12*s.* 2*d.*; meal, 59 chalders, 11 bolls; meal, 63 chalders, 9 bolls 1 firlot."

In the "Taxatio omnium prelatorum regni Scotie ad . xiiij<sup>c</sup> . libras pro sustentatione Novi Collegii Justicie," imposed about the year 1546, the religious foundations of the diocese of Aberdeen are thus estimated:

" Episcopatus Aberdonensis	.	.	.	xvij libre.

Prioratus de Fyve	.	.	.	ij libre . xvij solidi.
Prioratus de Monymusk	.	.	.	ij libre . xvij solidi."

(Books of Council and Session, vol. v., fol. xxxvj., MS. in the Register House, Edinb.)

The following fragment of a rental of the abbey, about the time of the Reformation, is found in an imperfect copy of the Books of Assumption, in the British Museum :

" ABBEY OF DEIR.

The house, built of red sand stone, was of ample dimensions ; but, in so far as may be judged by the remains, its architecture was of that rude and simple kind,<sup>a</sup> which marked the early and better days of Citeaux. The annalist of stately Melrose might well disdain the humble edifice of Deir ;<sup>b</sup> but if Saint Robert of Molesme, or Saint Stephen Harding, could have risen from the grave to choose between them, it cannot be doubted to which monastery they would have turned, as most in accordance with the austere and self-denying spirit of their rule.

The story of a memorable vision which, according to popular belief, foretold that the ancient house of the Marischal of Scotland was to date its slow decay and assured overthrow from the day of its “ sacraledgeous medling with the Abisie of Deir, ” has of late been printed more than once.<sup>c</sup>

they endowed with a portion of the doomed spoil, they inscribed these words of unavailing defiance :

The Earls Marischal appear to have grudged payment even of the niggard pittance of the revenues of the church, which the law secured to the reformed preachers. In the year 1587, the General Assembly complains that “the kirks of Deir are all frustrated of their stipends, and the ministers thairof not [payed] according to their provision made in my Lord Marshall’s infestment. The Abernethies took entries from Lord Marischal until the year 1722, when the lands were sold by them to Duff of Crombie ; who, anno 1733, sold them to Peter Gordon, esquire of Ardmellie : and they are now the property of John Morison, esquire of Auchintoul.”]

By a charter, dated at his manor of the Forest of Kyntor, on the eighth of October 1378, William of Keith, Mareschal of Scotland, lord of the barony of Alden, gave six merks yearly from the lands of Achidonale (Achyndonald, Achtidonald) to endow a chaplainry in the choir of the cathedral of Saint Machar at Aberdeen, for the soul's health of his well-beloved clerk, Sir William of Calabre, prebendary of Ellon, and canon of Aberdeen. (Registrum Episcopatus Aberdonensis, vol. i., pp. 121-124, 126-128.) The grant was confirmed by Pope Clement VII. in the year 1380; and by King Robert II. in the year 1385. (Id. vol. i., pp. 124-126, 128, 129.) In the year 1392, by consent of Sir William of Calabre, the chantry was suppressed, and the six merks were bestowed on the stallar or vicar choral of the prebendary of Ellon. (Id. vol. i., pp. 179-182.)

In a roll of missing charters by King Robert I., is "Carta Roberti de Keith, Marshell of Scotland, of the lands of Alnedan and Auchidouenald, etc., in vicecomitatu de Aberdeen." (Robertson's Index to the Charters, p. 2.)]
